APPENDIX.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, December 5, 1921.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with permission granted by unanimous consent of the House to extend my remarks in the RECORD and print the so-called slacker lists, I desire to call attention to a letter of The Adjutant General, P. C. Harris, dated November 30, 1921.

It is my intention to insert these lists on the 5th day of each month until all of the names are printed. No good soldier will be injured by the publication of his name in these lists; but, on the contrary, if his military record is one to be proud of, the publication will only serve to call attention to that record. If by mistake the names of good soldiers have not been eliminated from the record, it will be my pleasure and duty to insert in the RECORD the facts in each individual case and to see that the facts are brought to the attention of the Secretary of War, who is as anxious as any soldier of the late War with Germany to have the records correct. Mistakes ought to be corrected while the men are living and while there is evidence to substantiate any valid claim as to service.

The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, November 30, 1921.

Hon. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 5, 1921, lists of alleged draft deserters, which lists were released by the War Department for publication between October 5 and November 4, 1921, both dates inclusive. A copy of the statement to be printed at the head of the lists is also herewith.

There is also transmitted herewith, for insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, a list of the names of registrants which have been removed from the lists of alleged draft deserters heretofore published in the RECORD, the reasons for such removals being set forth in the second paragraph of the statement which is to precede the lists in the RECORD.

Very respectfully,

P. C. HARRIS,
The Adjutant General.

The men whose names appear below, and who were under the jurisdiction of the local boards named, were, according to the public draft records, classified and reported by the draft authorities as deserters from the military service of the United States. The lists in which these names were originally included have been given at least one month's publicity.

The name of any man who, since the publication of the lists, has been found to have actually rendered service in either our own forces or in those of the Allies during the period between May 18, 1917, and November 11, 1918, is not included; nor is that of any man who, though he rendered no service during the period mentioned, has, since the publication of his name, been found to have been erroneously inducted or to have been erroneously certified as a deserter, nor that of any man who is known to be no longer living.

Every reasonable effort has been made by the War Department to eliminate from these lists names which, for any of the aforementioned reasons, should not appear thereon. Should it develop, however, that certain of the names listed below should, for any of these reasons, likewise be removed, notice to that effect will be published in each such case in a later issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

OF
HON. S. D. FESS,
OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, December 21, 1921.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted I extend my remaks by printing the following address delivered by myself before the Young Men's Christian Association, of Lancaster, Pa., on December 11, 1921, as follows:

PROBLEMS BEFORE THE COUNTRY WITH SPECIAL ATTENTION TO THE PROBLEMS AND PROSPECTS OF THE ARMS CONFERENCE.

[By Representative S. D. FESS, of Ohio.]

(Address delivered before the Y. M. C. A., Lancaster, Pa., Dec. 11, 1921.)

Secretary Searles, Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, I am pleased to see this great audience on this occasion. I have been making an annual trip to address these great meetings under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. since 1913. Recently I had the honor to be present as a guest at the dinner tendered in the Capital to Marshal Foch by the international committee of the Y. M. C. A. Dr. Mott gave us a bird's-eye view of the wonderful work of this organization during the war. I was really proud to be thought worthy the honor of the invitation, and wish now to congratulate those here interested in the work of this great organization that has already encompassed the civilized world.

I came to speak to you on the problems before the country. I will confine what I have to say on the problems and prospects of the arms conference now in session at Washington. The world was fully prepared for this conference. It had just passed through history's greatest convulsion, which left the world in a state of complete dislocation.

Heavy as were the burdens of war to us, they were vastly more disorganizing in the Old World. Britain's debt, which prior to the war was three billion, is now thirty-eight billion. France, with a population of but 38,000,000 people, saw her prewar debt of six billion increased to fifty-one billion. Germany bends under a debt of at least seventy-one billion. The Old World's debts approach the bewildering figure of four hundred billions. No one sees the way to meet these obligations of war.

Aside from this situation the fiscal systems of Europe are no less hopeless. The rouble, which normally is worth 51 cents, is now worth about one-tenth of a cent. The mark, worth normally 24 cents, is now worth one-third of a cent. Even the franc in France, one of the most substantial countries, is worth but 7 cents instead of its normal value of 20 cents. Italy's currency is about 4 cents instead of 20 cents. This deranged credit system has made the rate of foreign exchange almost prohibitive.

The depletion of Europe's productive power owing to war's vast destruction both of man power and industrial organization adds an additional item to the dislocation of the Old World's productive powers. Whatever be the remedies for this rehabilitation, everyone conscious of its causes—war—is anxious to find a way to prevent a recurrence of such a catastrophe.

It is well known that this was the determining factor which led ex-President Wilson to go to Europe to assist in drafting the treaty. He brought back his plan as a guaranty against future war. Whatever be the virtue of his plan of a League of Nations, no one will seriously doubt the sincerity of purpose nor deny that the intention was good.

I was among that number in public life that very seriously feared the possibility of his scheme; not the sincerity of his purpose but the actual commitments, which I feared involved a surrender of our sovereignty and independence. When it was submitted to the people in the "solemn referendum," I used all the energy I possessed to resist its adoption.

Whether its rejection was wise or not, as I think it was, the people did not agree to it as a safe plan against future war. President Harding, fully conscious of the yearnings of a war-weary world, soon after his inauguration took up through diplomatic channels the matter of calling a conference upon limitation of armament, a concrete possibility in lessening the burdens of war.

The many foreign complications growing out of the war and other sources one by one were clearing up with great honor to our own country and general satisfaction of all concerned. This composure was noticed in the Panama dispute with Costa Rica, the Tacnia-Arica embroglio, the controversy with Great Britain over Mesopotamia, and the Russian episode. The one cloud upon our international horizon was that of the Far East, greatly aggravated by the mandatory provisions of the Versailles treaty.

The President wisely requested the invited countries to the conference to agree to a discussion of the Far East question and to permit China to participate in that discussion. Quite naturally Japan hesitated, since this question involved her in a peculiar manner. She first desired to know whether in the proposed arms conference it was necessary to discuss the Far East question. When answered in the affirmative, she desired to know whether the range of discussion could be limited to specified items. When informed that such limitation would be unwise, she accepted unconditionally, and is now in the conference, which is unhindered in the range of discussion of the sensitive question.

Japan's situation appeals to all fair-minded countries. She is an island country, half the size of Texas, with a resident population of 56,000,000. This population is increased to 78,000,000 if we include the Japanese in outlying countries. Her one great need is territory, not only for expansion of a growing population but for needed industrial and agricultural production to support the population. This is necessary if this rapidly growing nation is to continue to grow. However, this very item is to this country a source of some concern. It constitutes our Japanese problem in California and other coast States. It is a phase of our Hawaiian problem. It aggravates in some degree the Philippine problem. Britain also realizes the same possible controversy in Australia, New Zealand, and Canada. While we as a Nation sympathize with Japan's needs, it should be no offense for us to wish to know her ambition. Whatever be her purpose, we do not fully understand her ambitions in the future if her activity in the past is to be taken as suggestive.

In 1894 Japan was in war with China. The world received its first sensation from that quarter when it saw a small country of 50,000,000 people at that time dictate hard terms of peace to a country of 425,000,000 people. China was told she must pay an enormous indemnity or grant concessions in Manchuria. Of course, Japan knew China was unable to do the former, and naturally included in the latter her real needs—territory for expansion. China, helpless, agreed to the concessions exacted, whereupon Russia intervened. Here was a country comprehending one-sixth of the inhabitable globe, but without an outlet to the sea, which would preclude her ever becoming a world power. The Baltic is a closed sea. Her northern coast is a frozen sea; Vladivostock is closed by ice six months of the year. Her real hope for an outlet was through Manchuria. If Japan secures the concession demanded of China, that hope vanishes. Russia therefore supplied China with means to satisfy the indemnity and in turn sought and secured from China the much-needed port at Port Arthur, with further concessions to make the port accessible.

Japan, left with no alternative, accepted the indemnity and set about building a navy. In 10 years she reached her naval supremacy on the Pacific, and issued an ultimatum to Russia to withdraw from Port Arthur. The inaction of the Northern Empire was the occasion for the order for the armies of Japan to move. Here the world was to receive its second suprise from Japan in her ability to humble one of the world's most powerful Governments and populous nations and win her much-desired area for expansion.

This last achievement, not unlike the one 10 years before, caused much inquiry as to the real ambitions of Japan. Her population now reaching 78,000,000 is not insignificant. She is trailing close to our number. We will not be easy if she in time by a policy of aggression comes into control of the 425,000,000 Chinese. In 1900 the United States had occasion in the Boxer episode to study the tendencies of the nations toward China as the world's greatest field for exploitation. President McKinley took his stand for the maintenance of the political and territorial integrity of this ancient oriental empire, which is now conceded to have been the force that prevented the carving of China and which marked our Nation as China's best and most powerful friend. Japan's relations with China had been a matter of such concern to our Nation that her various movements had already attracted our attention.

When the World War finally drew Japan on the side of the Allies, and later when the secret treaty of 1915 became known, it is not too much to say that America became deeply concerned. Japan's 21 points demanded of China, especially group 5, were ominous. When the war ended and the treaty was signed, at least five specific items of wide significance stood out before us. Japan's attitude and her claims were of interest:

1. Her clear intent to seize and hold that portion of Chinese territory occupied by Germany under treaty wrung from China at a former date.

2. The revelation of the 21 demands in 1915.

3. Her Siberian expedition in 1918, when she joined the United States to cooperate in the protection of the eastern coast by sending an army equal to ours. Instead of her sending an army of 7,000 to match our force she placed something like 90,000 men in various parts of Chinese territory so brigaded as not to reveal to the world just how many she had sent in, or under what command they were operating.

4. Her demand at Paris in 1919 for Shantung, a Province of perhaps 40,000,000 people, which would make Japan a nation of 118,000,000, or considerably greater than our own population.

All this in the light of Japan's policy in Korea compelled this Nation to inquire into the real purpose of what seemed an ambitious country.

President Harding has been gratified in seeing our international relations, which had been sadly interrupted by the war, clear up one by one. He has been happy over the marked success of his Secretary of State, who has taken rank with the greatest of our diplomats. As I said before, he saw Panama adjust her dispute with Costa Rica in accordance with our suggestion. He saw Mexico by decree of her supreme court eliminate the offensive article of her constitution of 1917 in accordance with the suggestion of Mr. Hughes. He was greatly pleased to find Britain willing and anxious to adjust our unfortunate dispute growing out of the mandatory feature of the Versailles treaty.

He indorsed the State Department's handling of the soviet relationship in a manner not only salutary to us but to all Europe. The one ominous cloud still on the international horizon is the Far East.

The Wilson administration has attempted to reach an agreement with Japan on this issue. The one concrete accomplishment was the publication in November, 1917, of the Lansing-Ishii agreement.

Mr. Lansing's interpretation is that through this agreement we have committed Japan to the American doctrine on the "open door" in China. Just how far the recognition of "special interests" may extend is not stated and seems to have aroused fear in China. The language of the agreement is as follows:

"The Governments of the United States and Japan recognize that territorial propinquity creates special relations between countries, and consequently the Government of the United States recognizes that Japan has special interests in China, particularly in the part to which her possessions are contiguous."

Japan has said we do not fully understand her situation and her desires. She claims she only wants a Japanese "Monroe doctrine" for the Far East, as we have an American Monroe doctrine for the New World. She concedes the justice of our grounds for such a doctrine and wishes us to do likewise for her claims. If that be an accurate statement of her position, we would not resist it. The Monroe doctrine is our effort to prevent interference of any European Government with the Government of any American country—Central or South American. This was formulated when an attempt through the European Holy Alliance was made to compel the former Spanish colonies in South America which had successfully set up independent Republics to return to the alliance of Spain.

If Japan's policy is to maintain the sovereignty and independence of China as against outside aggression, as we wish to maintain the sovereignty and independence of the American Republics—in all American Governments—our country will not question it. In the light of the recent past and the great uneasiness displayed in Chinese circles, as well as the attitude of this ancient oriental people through their representatives at the Versailles treaty, the real desires of Japan are important, and our country is anxious to know them and reach an amicable understanding with honor and justice to all concerned.

The immediate dispute is the Island of Yap.

While relations with other countries interrupted by the war were expeditiously composed, Japan seems unable to reach agreement with us on the Yap episode, growing out of the Versailles treaty, which added to the desire of the President to bring her into a conference to discuss the whole situation as it affected the entire Pacific.

Mr. President, as a preliminary to the opening of the conference, a scene occurred in Washington the day before which will never be witnessed again in the world. We saw the bier containing the body of an unknown American soldier, which the day before, on November 10, while lying under the dome of the Capitol had been viewed by 100,000 citizens—we saw this soldier pass down Pennsylvania Avenue past the White House on to its final resting place at Arlington. The bier was followed by President Harding and Gen. Pershing on foot. They were followed by the Cabinet. Then came the Supreme Court, headed by Chief Justice Taft. Then came the Senate, then the House of Representatives, which was followed by ex-President Wilson in a carriage drawn by two black chargers; then came the soldiers and sailors, followed by the populace. At Arlington all the world was touched by the tributes. Marshall Foch, the head of the allied armies, laid upon the bier with his own hands the floral tribute of the conquering armies of the world. Gen. Diaz, the Italian victor over the Austrian Armies, did likewise. Admiral Beatty, the victor in the Battle of Jutland, paid the tribute of the navies of the allied powers. The English war mother did it for the golden star mothers. About the bier stood with bowed and uncovered heads Balfour, the head of the British delegation; Briand, the head of the French delegation; and the representatives of all the delegations here to meet in conference on the following day, as one by one, nation after nation, paid its tribute of respect to an unknown soldier, who, on the call of his country, had responded to defend the honor of his Government, had fought and died under the skies of France, and was now back home again to rest in the soil of his native land. It was a scene which beggars description and which will never be duplicated.

The high note of the occasion was struck when the President said:

"Standing to-day on hallowed ground, conscious that all America has halted to share in the tribute of heart and mind and soul to this fellow American, and knowing that the world is noting this expression of the Republic's mindfulness, it is fitting to say that his sacrifice, and that of the millions dead, shall not be in vain. There must be, there shall be, the commanding voice of a conscious civilization against armed warfare."

The entire address was a clarion call to the statesmen of the world to endeavor to find a way by which the burdens of armament can be reduced. No more fitting occasion could have been chosen than the time and place—Armistice Day at Arlington, in the presence of the delegates of all the great powers of the earth.

This relief from the burden of war was the dominant note in the thought of the world, and formed a splendid slogan for the conference which the President was to open the next day.

In his address at the opening of the conference he stirred the entire reading world when he declared that the United States "wanted less of armament and none of war." He also made our purpose in calling the conference when he declared "we harbor no fears, we suspect no enemy, we apprehend or contemplate no conquest. We have no sordid ends to serve. Content with what we have, we seek nothing which is another's. We only wish to do with you that finer, nobler thing which no nation can do alone. We wish to sit with you at the table of international understanding and good will. In good conscience we are eager to meet you frankly, invite and offer cooperation."

Mr. Balfour, in presenting Mr. Hughes as the president of the conference, declared the President had placed the work of the conference on the plane of "sincerity, honesty, and honor."

Mr. Hughes then proceeded to give those assembled, a most eminent audience, their wonderful thrill. It came after his audacious announcement, "The time has come, and this conference has been called, not for the purpose of general resolution and advice but for action." He then, speaking for the American delegation, acting under the instructions of the President of the United States, proceeded to submit the American proposals. As he laid the cards on the table—one, two, three—in which America proposed to go more than halfway, and virtually challenged the world to meet her, the audience, at first breathless, broke into wild enthusiasm, in which most of the foreign delegates joined. This open and clear-cut proposal disarmed the usual secret diplomacy. Three days later the second conference was held to hear the answer of Britain and Japan on the proposals. During these three days the proposals were read by literally the whole civilized world. The world experienced its second thrill when Balfour, the head of the delegation from the country of the greatest navy of history, accepted in principle the proposals. He was followed by Japan. Some of us realized that history was taking great strides. No one can truly estimate how great.

In the meantime the various committees on the Far East, appointed at the first conference, had been at work.

At the third conference, after Chairman Hughes announced satisfactory progress of the conference, Mr. Briand presented the French situation as touching the needs of an army. While limitation of land forces was not included in the agenda, France has a peculiar situation the conference agreed to allow presented by her premier. His presentation was dramatic and powerful, and it was quite apparent that he won the sympathy of the conference as immediately expressed by the nations represented, as one by one the delegations responded in brief speeches. However, Mr. Chairman, I am convinced that France must and will reduce her army. Not by order of this conference, as I have just stated the army is not included in the agenda. But France, under her conditions, can not possibly maintain her present military establishment.

We are a Nation of over 100,000,000 people, the wealthiest of all the earth, with more banking resources within our borders than all the outside world combined possess. We have a debt of but $24,000,000,000, yet this Nation complains of the burdens of an Army of but 150,000.

France, with a population of but 38,000,000, not increasing, has a debt of fifty-one billions; a population a little over one-third of ours and a debt considerably more than double ours. How can she support an army four times the size of ours? She simply can not do it. She must and will reduce it, notwithstanding the danger of a nearby enemy nation of nearly double her population, with a hatred the bitterness of which can not be expressed, and the duration of which must be disturbing for some time to come.

The same is true of Greece, Rumania, Czechoslovakia, and Poland. These armies sap the wealth of the nations both in reducing production and in increasing unproductive consumption.

The fourth conference was held yesterday, when the nations took action upon questions concerning China. This far eastern situation has from the beginning involved more difficulty than that of limitation of naval armament. Japan's 21 points in the light of her movements since 1894 were unsettling, if not ominous. Back in 1915, May 11, our Government had notified Japan "that it can not recognize any agreement or undertaking which has been entered into or which may be entered into between the Governments of Japan and China impairing the treaty rights of the United States and its citizens in China, the political or territorial integrity of the Republic of China, or the international policy relative to China commonly known as the open-door policy." Her expedition in Siberia, which she is slow to vacate, and her dominancy to-day in Vladivostok, Harbin, Mukden, and other centers occupied since 1918, and what has appeared to many as her vacillating attitude on her purposes in Shantung, all taken together make the far eastern the most acute problem before the conference.

China in the early days of the conference submitted her 10 points as counter to Japan's 21. The sharp difference thus stated indicated the acuteness of the issue. The American delegation, representing an unbiased judgment on the far eastern situation, submitted, through Root, probably the ablest mind on international relations now living, a sort of magna charta for China, couched in four short paragraphs, sufficiently broad as to cover our view of an independent and sovereign China. This proposal comprehends the aspirations of a nation and it promises when fully realized more far-reaching results than China has had in all her history. They are as follows:

"(1) The nations agree to respect the sovereignty, independence, and the territorial and administrative integrity of China.

"(2) The nations agree to provide the fullest and most unembarrassed opportunity for China to establish and maintain for herself an effective and stable government.

"(3) The nations agree to use their influence for the purpose of effectually establishing and maintaining the principle of equal opportunity for the commerce and industry of all nations throughout the territory of China.

"(4) To refrain from taking advantage of the present condition in order to seek special rights or privileges which would abridge the rights of the subjects or citizens of friendly States and from countenancing action inimical to the security of such States."

The first principle is to insure a sovereign and independent China, free from outside domination, a thing China has not had for years, and without which she remains helpless as against probable exploitation. The second is to assist in composing the unfortunate internal dissension now between north and south China. The united support of all nations here represented to assist China in her need for stability at home, a very significant step for China. The third is to insure the open-door policy. This is a signal achievement which this country has ever sought to win. Its significance lies in the possibilities of an awakened Orient. The fourth is to free China of the extraterritorial jurisdictions of numerous nations now claiming special rights and privileges. These proposals had been favorably acted upon on November 21, and yesterday were formally and publicly approved by all the powers represented at the conference, including Japan. I am sure that few of us can realize how far-reaching toward complete composure of the acute situation of China this action is. In the light of the character of the dispute it is difficult to even realize that such agreement could ever be achieved. It speaks volumes upon the importance of the conference when measured by results.

After this action Senator Lodge reported the quadrilateral agreement which had been reached by the United States, Great Britain, France, and Japan on Pacific matters outside of the territory of China. It is couched in four short articles and very simple language. It is to make possible the abrogation of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, which is not free of some offense to the United States and which Britain wanted to abandon if it could be done without offense to Japan. It is not an alliance but a mere agreement to frankly communicate with one another over disputes to reach adjustment. It involves no element of force, but rests simply upon the good faith of the four nations. The signers of the instrument all assert that the agreement neither expresses nor implies the use of military force to compel adjustment.

The United States will not enter into any offensive or defensive alliance. Our Nation has ever been averse to such a policy. That was made plain to France to the great disappointment of the latter country, which had hoped to win a triple alliance for her protection. The four parties of the agreement have interests in the Pacific which might some time be occasion for dispute. We have the Philippines, Guam, and Hawaii. If a dispute should arise between us and Japan, or either of the other two parties, over any of these items which we were unable to adjust, before any belligerent step is taken all the four countries under the provisions of the treaty would be called into advise over the matter in the hope of reaching an amicable decision. That situation is covered by the first article. It simply is a provision for a "cooling off" time. If the rights are threatened by some power not of the four signatory powers, say a dispute between the United States and Germany over the Philippines, the United States will consult with the three other signatory powers as to the most efficient measures to meet the situation. This treaty covers possible disputes over the mandated islands. For months Japan has delayed to accept our position in this controversy as applied to the island of Yap. This present treaty provides that our position in this dispute must be accepted as a condition of ratification. This will clear up the remaining item of controversy growing out of the Versailles treaty as far as it affects the United States and Japan. It further provides that upon its ratification the Anglo-Japanese alliance shall cease. It thus removes a treaty that, right or wrong, has been regarded by us as unfriendly.

Gentlemen, I am unable to properly estimate the importance of what is now taking place in Washington. Greater history is being written there since Armistice Day, of a little over a month ago, than has been written in a century of time in the lives of most nations.

Yesterday we listened to the vote on the approval of the Root proposals on behalf of China. Then we listened to the reading of the quadrilateral treaty and saw and heard Mr. Hughes on the part of our Nation vote the assent of this Republic. He then proceeded to call in alphabetical order the names of the other eight nations in the conference. It was a moment of stupendous meaning, not only to those present but to all the world. He was literally calling the roll of the world and recording the vote as openly and publicly announced by the representatives upon an issue of world significance in behalf of world peace, which has taxed the wisest minds of the race.

Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, I have talked to you upon the problems of the arms conference. Now what can I say about the prospects? I will take but a moment of your time on this query. I am not dogmatic and am not given to undue speculation, but since many pessimistic dispatches are daily going out from Washington by correspondents some of whom unfortunately wrote without comprehension of the world situation and wholly unmindful of the spirit of the conference on the one hand and the directing power of its proceedings on the other, I wish now to say that the conference will be a wonderful and signal success. The proposals laid down by our Government will be accepted substantially as first proposed. It is simply incredible that any nation would throw herself athwart the only course now open to the world for relief from burdens which if continued will cause the collapse of civilization. The final decision on the limitation of naval armament will not differ from the Hughes proposals. If Japan has reasons to keep the Mutsu, which is her contention, a way will be found for her to scrap some other vessels so as to leave the ratio as originally stated. It is not the vessels which are important, but the ratio for future armament.

There never was a time in our history when the Nation was so completely dominated by the sentiment on any subject as it is now dominated by that of peace. In fact, the horrors of this war have effected such a powerful organization of public opinion that to-day it is driving every nation before it.

Suppose that the magnanimous proposals of our Government—which means scrapping double the fighting craft demanded of Japan and decision to require replacement in the future to be maintained as the existent tonnage of the three naval powers of 5, 5, 3—suppose Japan rejects that proposal. What is the only conclusion to be drawn? That she must be free to get ready to make a test on the sea in the future. With whom? Not Britain, the other sea power, because she and Britain have been in an alliance since 1901. It must mean the United States. Allow that statement once to reach the public, what would become of the peace sentiment now so powerful? Ladies and gentlemen, here in America there would blaze such a demand for immediate preparation that nothing we have yet known would compare with what we would feel then. The only limit on the sea would be America's ability, which is boundless. Japan knows this as well as we do. Britain has made it plain that no alliance can be continued that could be unfriendly to the United States. That means Japan would have to go alone. This made the rejection of the proposals incredible, if not impossible, from the beginning.

Our great duty to follow the agreement is a sort of mental disarmament, where we can think calmly and coolly upon international differences; hence the vast importance of a plan to insure a "cooling-off" time before decisive action is taken.

Japan has shown a surprisingly fine attitude on the Far East question. As a student of this problem I frankly express my surprise as well as great satisfaction that a way has been found to adjust that one difficult international problem to the satisfaction of our own views, and seemingly to the complete security of China's proper position.

When the first day's conference closed I was so thrilled over the sudden, unexpected, and surprisingly concrete proposals that I went to my office and wrote Secretary Hughes a note in which I stated that when he had finished his address our Nation had reached a high level I had never hoped to live long enough to see. I further stated that during the hour and a half of the conference, we had, in my judgment, grown more than in any 25 years of our history. That is my belief to-day, and, further than that, I wish now to say to you that when the conference adjourns it will have achieved, in my judgment, the most outstanding single event in the history of our national existence, outside of the inauguration of our Constitution and the preservation of the Union by the Civil War. I sincerely believe that this conference has already demonstrated the fulfillment of President Harding's utterance to the delegates on the opening of the conference—utterance which now appears prophetic. "In all simplicity, in all honesty, and all honor, there may be written here the avowals of a world conscience refined by the consuming fires of war, and made more sensitive by the anxious aftermath. I hope for that understanding which will emphasize the guaranties of peace, and for commitments to less burdens and a better order which will tranquillize the world. In such an accomplishment there will be added glory to your flags and ours, and the rejoicing of mankind will make the transcending music of all succeeding time."

OF
HON. JAMES H. SINCLAIR,
OF NORTH DAKOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, December 15, 1921.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, under the permission granted me I wish to insert in the RECORD a speech on the subject of general agricultural conditions, delivered by Senator E. F. LADD, of North Dakota, before the monetary conference, held in Washington on December 15, 1921, as follows:

WHY I INTRODUCED SENATE BILL 2342.

The bill that is presented for the consideration of this conference provides for a credit service to supplement, not to supplant, that already in existence. It proposes that the Federal Government shall resume the function of issuing money and distributing credit to the extent necessary to give to all the people on equal terms access to the productive facilities that all have created. It proposes to restore and equitably to distribute to the people the buying power which is now concentrated in the hands of a few and which those few are unable to use beneficially to themselves or to the country as a whole. It proposes to free industry from the bonds which have been fastened upon it by a system that admits its helplessness to break those bonds and it proposes to do this by restoring to the people through their Government the power that belongs to them alone and that can not be exercised by private interests for private profit, without bringing disaster upon all the people, including those who exercise such power. It proposes to do this by providing for the exercise of a sovereign power delegated by the States through the Constitution to the Federal Government and reserved to it alone. In short, the bill provides for the remedying of a situation that can not longer be endured by the only method that is at once economically sound, constitutional, and practicable.

It should be borne in mind that we can not hope to attain all that each individual or each school of thought would strive for; however, we must focus on some definite proposition and seek to deal through this with the real fundamentals, leaving the less essential details to be later developed as experience will demonstrate as desirable.

Observers of world conditions are agreed that a crisis exists to-day that threatens the very existence of our civilization. It is also agreed that, menacing as are international relations and political conditions in many countries, the most serious problem confronting civilization is the adjustment of economic and industrial relations, so that the people of the world may be fed, clothed, and sheltered, and may acquire the material means for the development of their intellectual, moral, and spiritual life.

The situation in the Old World, no doubt, is largely aggravated as a result of the World War, which brought about a collapse of economic, financial, and industrial organization in all the countries engaged. In this country our present economic ills may be in part ascribed to the war, but only in part. There is a fundamental difference between our economic situation and that of Europe. The economic problem of Europe is how to produce, with her entire man power and resources, enough to keep her people alive. Our economic problem is how to dispose of the surplus products we have produced and are able to produce.

The American Continent is the only part of the civilized world left by the war with practically unimpaired resources. Even before the war the resources of the Western Hemisphere were, as compared with its population, much greater than the resources of the Old World, as would naturally result from the fact that their civilization is centuries older. The Western Hemisphere was also richer before the war in individual initiative, inventiveness, and productive power.

The United States is by far the richest and the most favorably situated country on the Western Hemisphere. Our losses, whether of materials or men, were much smaller than those of European nations, so that our position is still more favorable by comparison since the war than it was before.

Because of the Great War the world, according to recent statistics, lost 9,998,771 men killed, 20,297,551 wounded, and the money lost was $337,946,179,657. The United States loss of men was 50,226 men killed, 197,613 men wounded. The balance of the great loss came mainly from the Old World and from its possessions.

THE UNITED STATES CAN FEED THE WORLD.

This country alone has resources more than sufficient to feed, clothe, and shelter the entire population of all civilized countries. Probably it would not be too strong a statement to say that with our present man power and material equipment, properly and effectively applied to our natural resources, we could furnish all the principal necessities for the economic support of all the people of the earth for years to come. It has been computed that we have standing room for all the human beings now living in the State of Texas alone, giving to each individual 66 feet square of space. It has been estimated that California alone could furnish all necessities and many luxuries for one-half the present population of the United States. That section of the country usually referred to as the Northwest could feed the present population of the United States with the exception of such things as are grown in tropical countries without any great strain upon its resources, and its surplus will be sufficient to purchase these products. Taken together with the Pacific Northwest it could furnish all the breadstuffs, meat products, dairy and poultry products, wool, flax, shoes, lumber, iron, steel, coal, and water power the entire country could use in the next 500 years.

The like could be said of almost any other great subdivision of the United States, yet there are millions in this country today who are facing a winter of threatened suffering from exposure and lack of food. At the same time, the farmers of the country have produced so great an excess of food that it can not be carried over by our transportation, marketing, and credit system and placed in the hands of consumers, even though we have employment at prices within their reach. We have ample resources of coal and other fuel to meet all needs for industrial and domestic uses of our people and more; yet many parts of the country are facing the practical certainty of a fuel famine in case the winter should be severe. We have plant capacity for the manufacture of wood and metal products and fabrics far in excess of available markets. We have an almost incalculable supply of hydroelectric power lying unused. In short, we have everything needed for production at living standards unknown in any other part of the world and nonexistent in the entire economic history of civilization.

Paradoxical as it may seem, economists are telling us that all of our troubles are due to the fact that we have produced more than we can consume. Dr. R. Estcourt, writing in the Annalist, recently took this position, pointing out that similar crises have heretofore been passed by the absorption of the surplus by Governments in destructive wars or constructive public enterprises. This economic writer of world-wide repute seems unable to find any other solution for our present problem, except that we shall encourage a still greater piling up of profits by the economically favored classes, so that they may take to themselves and use up our accumulated surplus of production so as to allow industry to go on again. This, he calls "vicarious consumption." Others who agree with Dr. Estcourt on the fact of overproduction and its effects differ with him as to the possibility of disposing of the surplus by increasing the consumption of the rich. They hold on the contrary that even with the utmost extravagance the rich do consume and can consume only a very small part of what is produced; yet, inconsistently these economists hold that the consumption of the masses must always be rigidly restricted by keeping down of wages or otherwise in order to prevent "impairment of our capital."

BARRON DEFINES CAPITAL.

The review already given of our resources, however, shows very plainly that there is no lack of capital in this country for the production of many times the commodities that all classes could use, even in the absence of automatic or arbitrary checks upon consumption. What is capital? Capital was defined during the war by Mr. C. W. Barron, of the Wall Street Journal and Barron's Weekly, who certainly will not be accused of radical or socialistic leanings, as being "our total ability to produce." He explained that it included all material resources and equipment, organization, directive ability, and skilled and unskilled labor. It has been shown that there are more resources than we can use; more plant equipment, more skilled and unskilled labor than those who are directing our industrial and business affairs are able to keep on the job. It appears, therefore, that the thing that we are lacking is effective coordination and organization for the application of capital to the work of production.

Mr. Barron has also accurately diagnosed our present economic disease, although he has not prescribed a remedy. He says that the normal round of production, exchange, and consumption has been broken throughout the civilized world; that the economic system has broken in the middle; that we are suffering from a collapse of transport, meaning by transport all the activities by which products are moved from the producer and distributed to the consumer. He divides transport into conveyance of goods, transportation; the marketing of goods and the exchange of goods by means of money and credit. Mr. Barron regards the breakdown in credit as far more serious than the breakdown in transportation or marketing. What is needed is that the round of production, exchange, and consumption be restored. When that is done, we shall be able to purchase all that we need and consume all that we produce.

IS OVERPRODUCTION A FACT?

Thus far we have spoken about overproduction somewhat as though it were an absolute fact. It may have been inferred that what is meant is that in the normal working out of the economical relations there will be produced from time to time more goods than can possibly be consumed. This is by no means true. Overproduction must be understood in a relative sense. There has never been a time in the history of mankind when all the people of any country had more than enough to satisfy their reasonable needs, to say nothing of their reasonable or unreasonable desires. Furthermore, overproduction, that is the constant existence of somewhat more actual goods or power to produce such goods than will supply the wants of the people at existing standards, is an indispensable condition to progress. It is a law of nature that there must always be something in excess of what is needed for the accomplishment of a given end. But we need not resort to any such philosophical reasoning to show that our present excess of production, as well as productive capacity, now lying unused could be easily absorbed. In fact, the excess must be absorbed and our production still further increased in order to save the people from want and their energies from deterioriation.

EARNINGS NOT PROPERLY DISTRIBUTED.

The trouble lies not in the fact that there are more goods produced than all of us need, but in the fact that the buying power is so distributed that the most of us can not buy what we need. Though there exists a glut of farm products that is bankrupting the farmers by the millions, food costs are so high that the average earnings of those in employment are insufficient to provide a reasonable standard of living, and there are from 5,000,000 to 7,000,000 out of employment who will presently, after their savings have been exhausted, be unable to buy anything. It is estimated by the Department of Agriculture that the buying power of the farmers of this country, through the deflation of farm products, was reduced $8,000,000,000 in 1920.

Farm prices are at least 25 per cent lower in 1921 than they were in 1920. Therefore if the buying power of the farmers was reduced $8,000,000,000 in 1920, it was reduced $14,000,000,000 in 1921 below what it was in 1919. But reliable figures have been compiled showing that all farm products produced in 1919 were sold at approximately $6,000,000,000 less than it cost to produce them. Production costs were higher in 1920 than in 1919 but somewhat lower in 1921 than in 1920. If we assume that the average production costs in the last two years were approximately equal to that of 1919, we find that the farmers received for the 1919 crop $6,000,000,000 less than the cost of production, for the 1920 crop $14,000,000,000 less, and for the 1921 crop $18,000,000,000 less than the cost. Thus we arrive at the astounding conclusion that the crops for these three years were sold at $38,000,000,000 less than the farmers and their families put into them in capital and labor. This means that the purchasing power of the farmers has been reduced by $38,000,000,000 in two years. Six billion dollars of this is due to inflation of all prices except farm products in 1919, and $32,000,000,000 to deflation of farm prices during the last two years.

THE GREATEST INDUSTRY.

There are in the United States 6,500,000 farms, and on these farms are employed 13,000,000 men, for the farmer is the largest single employer of labor of any industry in this country. It is also estimated that the farmer pays 56 per cent of all the freight charges of the country, for he pays the freight not only on the products shipped from the farm but likewise on all products purchased for use on the farm.

Have you ever stopped to think that these 6,500,000 farms are each separate manufacturing plants, purchasing enormous supplies, farm machinery of all kinds, tractors, thrashing machines, reapers, trucks, lumber, tile, wire fencing, building material of all kinds for homes and farm buildings, furniture, sewing machines, clothing, shoes, fertilizers, and innumerable other manufactured products to keep these plants running?

Now, force these 6,500,000 manufacturing plants to dispose of their year's output at way below cost of production, as indicated elsewhere in this address, and is it any wonder that the purchasing power of the country is gone? That is what has been done by the system adopted arbitrarily by a legalized governmental agency when turned over into private hands to form a monopoly. Could you expect the owners and managers of these 6,500,000 manufacturing plants, individual farmers, to go on purchasing when they have all been forced to the verge of bankruptcy and many tenants and renters obliged to leave all and move from the farms they tilled, while farm owners have had their mortgages foreclosed and the accumulations of a lifetime swept away in a few months by unnecessary rapid deflation brought on, according to John Skelton Williams, former Comptroller of the Currency, deliberately and in cold blood by the Federal reserve system officials, the officers of which have no interest or sympathy for the American farmer, nor do they understand his problems, because they reap their profits from the commercial and speculative interests of the country and in the fleecing of the farmers by prearranged panics, apparently successfully timed, brought on and managed by the great financial and banking interests who now control the world's greatest monopoly, the lifeblood of the Nation—its currency and credit. The Federal reserve bank system is the capstone of this financial banking system authorized by Congress and now a source of great danger for the overthrow of our democracy.

At a time when the Federal Reserve system was loaning, according to information furnished, for agriculture and live-stock paper in 18 States to 4,000 member banks only about $17,000,000, they planned and perfected arrangements for the erection of banking quarters in New York City that were to cost more than $25,000,000. How much better it would have been for this country had they turned their attention and efforts to legitimately solving the great problem confronting the farmers of this country and aiding in protecting the great basic industry so that we could have escaped at least in part the financial losses that stepped in.

WHAT OF DEFLATION?

The deflation of farm prices was the principal cause of a slowing up and stagnation of industry and business all along the line. It is a fact requiring no comment or explanation that individuals and corporations will not expand their business on a falling market. Instead the prices are going down and likely to continue going down; every business will curtail operations and, if necessary, close down entirely in order to avoid selling at a loss. This is what has occurred during the last two years. The slump in farm products started all prices downward. Only the greatest and most powerful of the industrial corporations, such as the Standard Oil Corporation and the United States Steel Corporation, were able to maintain their prices for any considerable time; and in the case of the latter it could only be accomplished by curtailment of production. In the end even the Steel Trust, the coal interests, lumber interests, and all other big monopolies except the oil combinations had to reduce their prices and to curtail operations in order to prevent further reductions. These adjustments resulted in throwing out of employment from 5,000,000 to 7,000,000 workers, under conditions in which, normally, we should have been short of man power to the extent of our own war losses, plus the migration of several million workers to Europe during the war. It is estimated by the United States Department of Labor that the losses of wage earners due to unemployment and reduced wages will amount to $10,000,000,000 a year. Owners of plants agree that their losses in profits, depreciation, and interest in idle investment will be at least equal to the losses of the wage earners. This means an additional $20,000,000,000 or $40,000,000,000 in two years to be added to the losses and reduced purchasing power of the farmers, making the enormous total of $78,000,000,000. It has been estimated by Mr. Hoover and others that incidental losses to mercantile business, due to stagnation of industry, will not be less than $5,000,000,000 a year, so that we have a grand total of $88,000,000,000 of loss to all industrial classes and an equal reduction in purchasing power coming as a direct or indirect result of the deflation of farm products. These enormous losses fully explain our inability to restore buildings and equipment which have to so great an extent run down since the beginning of the war. We practically suspended construction during the war, first, because of high prices due to the exportation of enormous quantities of war materials, and afterwards to meet the war necessities of our own Government.

To a large extent, especially on the farms, we have not even maintained the upkeep of building and equipment. It was estimated some time ago by the president of the American Contractors and Builders' Association that we are short in buildings and equipment to the extent of $30,000,000,000; and this estimate does not include the repairs and the renewal of farm buildings. Congestion in all the great cities of this country, due to lack of housing, is an ever-increasing menace to the health and well-being of our people. Our public utilities are many of them ready for the junk heap. Our national railway system is nearing the brink of material, financial, and moral bankruptcy; so that the need for building and equipment not only furnishes an outlet for so-called overproduction but the situation imperatively demands that large amounts of capital be turned in that direction. But the capital needed to restore buildings and equipment and $50,000,000,000 more has been wasted because of the failure of exchange that is largely due to the breaking down of credit.

RESTORING BUYING POWER.

Production fell off because of a lack of demand, and presumably may be restored by restoring demand. We could restore demand by putting our 6,000,000 or 7,000,000 unemployed workers at work building homes and other structures and producing the equipment that we lack. This would set plants going. It would start mines and sawmills in operation. It would furnish an outlet for farm products at prices that would cover the cost of production. The reemployment of these millions would restore their purchasing power. The absorption of surplus farm products and the restoration of farm prices to a normal level would bring back the purchasing power of the farmers. Plant owners and business men would again make profits; so that the $88,000,000,000 of lost purchasing power would be restored. This is equal to more than two years of normal net production. It amounts to over $400 a year for every man, woman, and child in the United States. It represents an annual loss in buying power and therefore in production of more than twice the cost of the war. It is for the two years more than twice the total of our municipal, State, and National bonded debt. It is nearly one-half of our estimated total wealth, and represents an annual loss of nearly the amount necessary to support our entire population at a standard of reasonable efficiency and comfort.

THE BANKING SYSTEM FAILS.

And all of this is chargeable, on the testimony of a prominent Wall Street expert, to the breaking down of exchange by means of credit and the failure of our banking system to discharge its proper function of financing the industries of the people.

It ought to be plain that the continuation of these conditions can not longer be endured. We are rapidly undermining our civilization by destroying our fundamental industry, by degrading creative genius and productive labor, and by demoralizing industrial organization. But how can these evils be remedied? How can this glaring defect in our economic system be cured?

We could easily restore buildings and equipment, notwithstanding these enormous losses, and in so doing we should so revive industry all along the line that all losses will be covered many times over.

It is held that deflation is the natural reaction from inflation and that inflation was the unavoidable accompaniment of war financing. But Government financing is not chiefly responsible for inflation.

The total cost of the war was less than $40,000,000,000. Government obligations issued for financing war activities were never much in excess of $30,000,000,000. The total national debt at this time is approximately $24,000,000,000. It would be absurd to say that these figures represent the total inflation of our business and industry. It may be that the financing of the war largely by bond issues increased the opportunity to profiteer and it has certainly furnished a means by which the enormous profits accumulated during the war period can be invested at something like two or three times their value at the time they were taken.

THE EVILS OF EXCESS PROFITS.

Excess profits from the industry and business of this country during the last several years have been estimated as high as $57,000,000,000. These profits are rightly called "excess" profits, not only because they are in excess of a fair business return but because they have accumulated during a period when production was below normal and therefore represent no economic service. In 1920 Mr. Hoover produced figures showing the annual increase in production for the years 1914 to 1919, inclusive, was only 3 per cent; since then production has still further fallen off. The average annual increase in production for the 10-year period ending with 1913 was 19 per cent; so that the average for the seven years since 1913 is 16 per cent below the average of the preceeding period, which for our purposes may be regarded as normal. During 1917 and 1918, while we were actually engaged in war and while the three to four million men in service were withdrawn from productive industry, we increased production nearly 20 per cent annually. This increase is included in the 3 per cent annual increase from 1913 to 1920, inclusive. So that, eliminating the years when we were engaged in war, the increased production which may be explained by the enthusiasm and patriotism of the people and the beneficial action of the Government in promoting and protecting industry, we find that there was no annual increase in production. Even including the war years the total increase for the period will no more than cover material war waste, so that these enormous profits were taken from our industries during a time when there was no equivalent production—that is, no actual commodities or wealth was produced corresponding to them. They represent pure inflation and nothing else. They stand now as a charge on American industry that must be paid out of future production. Not only is this true, but unless prices to producers are restored to a high level it would take at least twice the volume of products to pay for them that it would have taken if they had been paid when prices were highest. Therefore, even if these profits had been real economic profits, with a corresponding volume of production behind them, we should have had to pay for the services rendered double what they were worth. As it is, there are no services behind them. Those in control of our resources, our capital, our labor, and our credit arbitrarily fastened on our industries a charge of $57,000,000,000, which they afterwards doubled by the process of deflation.

WHERE EXCESS PROFITS HAVE GONE.

The Government has taken approximately $11,000,000,000 of these profits in taxes. It is a great pity that it did not take all of them. It has been prevented from taking more by the false cry that the excess-profits tax was draining away our capital and therefore stifling business. Instead of this being true the taking of these profits in taxes would have extinguished our war debt and at the same time would have eliminated this enormous charge upon our present and future production.

These profits were not only the chief cause of and the chief motive for inflation, but deflation has been brought about mainly for the purpose of securing their safe investment on a basis of value more than twice that which existed at the time the profits were taken. It has been pointed out repeatedly of late that the doubling or trebling of the purchasing power of the dollar doubled or trebled our entire public debt. It is believed by many that these profits are largely invested in municipal, State, and Federal bonds, and that therefore the war profiteers are the chief beneficiaries from this doubling and trebling of the debt. It is believed by many that the exemption from taxation of these securities give the holders of this enormous wealth wrung from the people under the stress of war an additional advantage. But the situation is apparently even worse than it would be if war profits were all invested in public bonds. So far as can be ascertained it appears that no very large amount of war profits has gone into public securities, and this for the reason that the holders of those profits have an even better way of investing them. Up to the end of 1920 more than $16,000,000,000 of these profits had been "plowed back" into the industries from which they were derived. Additional corporate financing has been going on at a tremendous rate. It would probably be conservative to estimate that share investment in great industrial and financial corporations, including this $16,000,000,000, has increased $30,000,000,000 since 1913. In addition there have been enormous issues of corporation bonds at rates of interest heretofore unknown. What the great financiers seemed to have aimed at and what they seem largely to have accomplished is the reinvestment of war profits in corporate industry on a basis that will yield them something like the war rates of return after business has recovered and prices are restored.

THE ECONOMIC CRISIS—WHY?

Not only is it not true that Government war financing was chiefly responsible for inflation, but it is not true that the war was chiefly responsible for our present dangerous economic crisis. The causes are more fundamental and are to be sought further back in our industrial history. Agriculture was going downhill long before the war, and when agriculture is going downhill all industry is going downhill. Production per acre had fallen off; soil fertility was being depleted; farm earnings were declining; farm-mortgage indebtedness was piling up; tenancy was increasing and rents becoming every year more burdensome; and all of this was reflected in a constantly accelerated migration from the farm to commercial centers, thus draining the industry of its best human energy at the same time that material resources were being depleted. The 1920 census shows that over 38 per cent of those operating our farms are tenants; calculations based upon the 1920 census returns show that farm mortgages for the entire country total $8,666,000,000. Short-time loans amount to approximately $4,000,000,000, making the total indebtedness upon which the farmers are paying interest $12,000,000,000. The annual interest charge upon this indebtedness at the average rate of interest, including bonuses and commissions charged by the bankers, will amount to over $800,000,000. The gross receipts of the farmers for the 1921 crop can hardly exceed $14,000,000,000, so that the farmers will be paying 6 per cent of their gross receipts in interest charges alone. In some agricultural sections the conditions are even worse.

In North Dakota the total interest paid by the farmers in 1920 was not less than $40,000,000 out of a gross return of $225,000,000. That is, North Dakota farmers paid in interest that year nearly 18 per cent of their gross earnings.

Nothing further is needed to show that under our present methods of financing agriculture and of transporting and marketing farm products the industry was on the road to bankruptcy even without the war. The war in many ways temporarily improved the condition of the farmers. While they made no great profits during the war, the stabilization of prices by the Government placed them in a better position than they had occupied for years, and better than they can hope to recover unless some very fundamental changes in our financial and marketing arrangements are made. What is true of the farmers is in a scarcely less degree true of our industries as a whole.

The outlook was by no means all rose color before the war. Before the war and before the accumulation of the enormous charges upon our industry due to war profiteering 2 per cent of the population of the United States owned 60 per cent of its wealth; 33 per cent of the population owned 35 per cent of the wealth, and the remaining 65 per cent owned 2 per cent of the wealth. These figures have been held to be misleading on the ground that it is not the ownership of wealth that is important but the distribution of the products from the employment of wealth. Attempts have been made to show that wage earners and farmers receive 80 per cent of our net annual production, and that the remaining 20 per cent goes largely to the maintenance of the capital necessary for future production. But these propositions, even if true, are nullified by the obvious fact that capital has ceased to function at a time when there is an excess of productive capacity and when that excess is admitted to be the chief factor contributing to the present stagnation of industry.

HIGH PROFITS AND CONCENTRATION OF WEALTH.

The distribution of wealth does give a measure of the relative power of the different interests to control production. Defenders of high profits and concentration of wealth reiterate the obvious fact that the very few who own so much of the wealth can not possibly consume it. They draw the inference from this fact that the very wealthy use what they do not consume for further production. This reasoning is fallacious. The real evil lies in the fact that the concentration of wealth has placed the control and management of production and distribution in the hands of a few great corporations and they have managed badly. This is conclusively proven by the record established by those in control of our capital resources since the war. The 2 per cent who own the 60 per cent of the wealth of the country had that control before the war and they have it now. They have exercised that control in such a way that we have lost $88,000,000,000 through the nonfunctioning of capital. They have controlled our productive resources in such a way that our war burden has been doubled. They have fastened upon industry an additional charge of over $80,000,000,000 in war profits for which they have rendered no service; they have wasted our natural resources. They have demoralized industrial organization. And they now confess that they have neither the initiative nor the courage to lead the country out of the chaos into which they have brought it.

Is there a way out of this chaos? There is, and the road is straight and open. All that is necessary is to state the facts of the situation clearly, to give them fair and impartial analysis, and to base our plan of action squarely upon the facts as found. Only by so doing can we gain and hold the confidence of the people and make headway against the powerfully entrenched interests that stand in the way of industrial and financial adjustment in the interest and for the protection of the rights of all the people.

THE LOSSES SUMMARIZED.

Before proceeding with the presentation of our plan it will be well to recapitulate the principal facts of the situation. We have found—

1. That as a result of the policy of inflation farmers lost $6,000,000,000 on the 1919 crop.

2. That as a result of the policy of deflation that followed farmers were behind $14,000,000,000 on the 1920 crop and $18,000,000,000 on the 1921 crop.

3. That on account of the slump in farm prices and the consequent stagnation of industry and business all along the line six or seven million workers were thrown out of employment, which, with wage reductions, resulted in losses to wage earners estimated by the United States Department of Labor at $10,000,000,000 a year.

4. That losses to owners of plants that reduced their output or closed down amount to another $10,000,000,000 a year.

5. That losses of merchants and other business men incident to the reduction of buying power and the slowing up of manufacturing industry have been estimated by competent authorities at $5,000,000,000.

6. That these losses to the several industrial classes aggregate $88,000,000,000 in two years.

7. That public debts, farm loans, and obligations of public-utility corporations capitalized against production mainly during the period of high prices amount to $78,475,843,900.

8. That at present values these capitalized charges upon production amount to at least $156,951,687,800.

9. That excess profits accumulating when prices were high amount, after taxes and postwar losses, to approximately $42,000,000,000, which at present values would amount to $84,000,000,000.

10. That if we estimate $50,000,000,000 only of debts of public utilities and farm mortgages as having accumulated while prices were inflated, there now stands against production a capitalized charge of $100,000,000,000 as the result of deflation, which added to the excess-profits charge gives a total of $184,000,000,000.

11. That the total accumulated charge on production due to war inflation and after war deflation, plus the losses due to the nonfunctioning of capital since the war, is $272,000,000,000.

It is to be noted that this amount is $22,000,000,000 of our total estimated wealth. It is more than two and a half times the highest estimate of net annual production in any previous year. But even this enormous sum does not fully represent the capitalized charge upon our industry.

HOW PROFITS ARE PLOUGHED BACK.

As we have seen, $16,000,000,000 corporation profits have been "ploughed back" into the industries from which they were taken; and there have been all along the line tremendous increases in corporation financing. It has been shown that it is strongly probable that the greater part of the war profits have been so disposed of.

While it is apparent that such profits as have been reinvested are already included in the total given, it must be borne in mind that the corporations are capitalized as nearly as possible on a basis of a maximum profit; which means that as soon as former profits are all safely invested those controlling the corporations will exert their utmost power to make our industries pay the former rates of dividend, so that the amount of profits already realized and reinvested by no means represents the entire charge upon production through corporation financing.

The realization of these investments and future profits depends upon the resumption of the maximum production, but those who are in control of our finances admit that they are unable to set industry and business going. They have been telling us for the last year and a half that it would be necessary to return to a "normal price level"—whatever that may mean—before we could go ahead again.

WHAT THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD TRIED TO DO.

We were told that prices could be brought down to a normal level by the restriction of credit. In line with this idea the Federal Reserve Board, supported by the greatest banking and financial interests, proceeded to put into operation a plan of credit restriction, with the disastrous results already enumerated. It would be a great mistake, however, to assume that the Federal Reserve Board actually accomplished credit deflation. It has been admitted by more than one of the strongest supporters of the policy that so-called "frozen" loans were not to any considerable extent thawed out, and that, in fact, the total volume of credit deflation is disappointingly small. As ought to have been expected, the very announcement and putting into practice of this policy so alarmed business that everyone who was able to do so got out from under as quickly as possible. Industrial and business concerns that were perfectly solvent and were making money curtailed their operations or closed their plants, paid their losses, and quit, in order to avoid the disaster that they knew would otherwise come with deflation. Many of the greater corporations, however, were in a strong enough position to hold on and maintain their high prices, restricting output to what they could dispose of at the high-price level. They, of course, retained the greater part of the credit they had been using in order to carry these operations. While the policy did compel the unloading of some swollen inventories, a recapitulation of the situation shows that the greater part of the high-priced goods in the hands of the manufacturers or merchants when the plan to deflate was announced were unloaded on consumers at the old prices, apparently because of a tacit conspiracy of manufacturer and merchants not to offer any low-priced goods until they had disposed of what they had on hand. Some of the great industrial corporations like the copper people covered their short-time loans by the issuance of long-time security, thus merely transferring the load from one part of the system to another. Because of the enormous slump in farm prices many farmers did not net enough to pay their bank obligations; and as bankers found that farm property would not sell for enough to pay these obligations they are still carrying them. It turns out that the total reduction in bank credit since the policy was put into operation is scarcely more than 25 per cent, and this is largely accounted for by the closing of solvent concerns, the covering of short-time with long-time obligations, the carrying over of farmers' obligations. It is therefore apparent that such credit deflation as has taken place has been accomplished largely by the stoppage of the industries using credit. This looks like killing the patient in order to cure the disease.

PRODUCTION DEFLATED, NOT CREDIT.

Production, not credit, has been deflated. Money, including credit, is inflated when the volume is disproportionately large as measured by the volume of production. We have shown that, as the result of deflation, the buying power of farmers, wage earners, and business men has been reduced $88,000,000,000 in two years. Except in agriculture, production has fallen off in equal ratio as measured by production at the highest war level. The decline in production is even greater than the falling off in buying power. There has been a reduction from the 1918 level of at least 50 per cent. We have, then, a deflation of money and credit of approximately 25 per cent and a deflation, outside of agriculture, of production of 50 per cent; so that inflation is greater now than it was when prices were at the highest level.

In fact, fundamentally considered, we are still suffering from inflation. There is too great a charge upon production. The charge must be extinguished or provided for before production can go forward. We must pay nearly $200,000,000 on the basis of present values or half that amount on the basis of values existing when the greater part of these obligations were contracted before those in control of our productive resources will allow us to go forward. We must also make up the enormous losses of the last two years. These interests tell us that we can not go ahead and restore our buying power, dispose of our surplus, and restore our depleted buildings and equipment until we have more capital. Though, while these tremendous obligations were being accumulated, they told us that profits constituted capital. They now tell us that capital can be accumulated only by personal abstinence and saving. If that were true, there would be no way out at all. How can we save when those of us who are in employment are earning barely enough to feed ourselves and our families, keep a roof over our heads, and millions are earning nothing at all? How can we save when all the big mines, mills, and factories are running only part time or are closed down? But even if we were saving at the maximum rate during the period of greatest capital prosperity, we could not by any possibility add more than $10,000,000,000 a year to our capital. At that rate it would require nearly four years to make up the losses the farmers have suffered during the last two years. It would require two years to make up the losses of the wage earners and an equal time to cover the losses of the plant owners, with still another year to cover those of the merchants.

PUBLIC DEBTS AND FARM MORTGAGES.

At present values it would require 18 years to accumulate enough in this country to pay public debts and farm mortgages. It would require nearly 30 years to pay off the whole existing capitalized charge upon production. In fact, figuring that these obligations bear an average interest rate of 5 per cent, our utmost accumulation through savings would fall short $5,000,000,000 a year of paying the interest alone, if paid in the present deflated value of labor and products.

It is therefore plainly absurd to talk of building up capital by savings in order to make up the enormous losses due to the nonfunctioning of capital. This proposition will appear even more absurd when it is remembered that, according to the financiers themselves, the present stagnation of industry and business is due chiefly to lack of buying power to absorb the capital that we had produced and can produce.

If we can already produce so much that the accumulated surplus threatened to bankrupt our industries, what would be the use of accumulating more capital? The truth is that we have resources, facilities, and man power sufficient to produce all that is needed to meet our maximum requirements, and we have buying power within ourselves enough to absorb all that we can produce, if we can only get the stuff over to the average consumer instead of having it piled up under the control of a few who are unable to use it.

ONE YEAR'S PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY.

It was estimated several years ago by an economist of high standing that, with the resources and facilities then existing, each worker could produce a value of $10 a day. Productive capacity per man has greatly increased since that time; but taking that figure, 40,000,000 workers will produce $120,000,000,000 worth of products in a year; the highest estimate of the sum necessary to provide a reasonable sustenance made by the United States Bureau of Labor is about $500 a year per capita. This would require $52,500,000,000 to support our present population, leaving an annual surplus for the capital fund of $67,500,000,000. It is therefore evident that instead of being in need of more capital, it will be necessary to further expand our capacity for consumption in order to prevent too great an accumulation.

As things stand, however, we shall have to extinguish the enormous total of charges upon production before we can begin to accumulate anything in excess of our needs for present sustenance, unless we are to adopt what is universally condemned as confiscation. We shall have to pay these obligations, whether they are just or not. In view of our enormous capacity for production, even with our present capital facilities depleted by the enormous losses of the past two years, this is by no means impossible. The entire amount could be disposed of within four or five years. It does not follow, however, that we must pay these obligations in products that are worth less than half what they were worth when the obligations were originated. Production has been deflated. It can be reinflated; or rather the value of products can be restored to a just ratio with the value of these charges upon production. We can do this in the very process of restoring industry and reviving production. We can do it by placing credit, which is the means and method of organizing and applying our capital resources to production, in the hands of an agency that will serve all productive industry impartially, instead of serving the interests that have loaded this tremendous burden upon industry. We can do it by restoring to the people the power through their own agencies to exchange their material capital, their organizing power, and their labor.

CREDIT CONTROL.

Under the present system credit is determined primarily with regard to the interests of those holding the accumulated charges upon production. Credit ought to be distributed so as to enable consumers to buy all that they need to satisfy their economic wants, so long as by the application of all capital and labor, the wants of all can be supplied. We have seen that the present stagnation of industry is due directly to a curtailment of buying power on the part of the consumers.

There is no lack of buying power in the aggregate, but it is concentrated in the hands of those who are unable to use it, and who have lately proved their inability to apply it as capital in further production. The most advanced economic thinkers of England have recently developed the doctrine that credit should be organized and controlled in the interests of consumers; that is, to enable all the people to buy the goods that all the people produce. But it really makes no difference whether credit is organized on a basis of consumption or on a basis of production since production is limited by demand and must approximately equal demand. Therefore, when we have credit enough for the consumer we also have credit enough for the producer. It is simply, as a Mr. Barron puts it, a matter of maintaining the round of production, exchange, and consumption among all the people who are both producers and consumers.

Practically, credit is always expressed in a demand upon goods ready for consumption or goods used in production. A loan is the transfer of such a demand from the borrower to the lender. We have seen that under the present system demands are capitalized upon production and become constantly greater until the load can no longer be carried. Those holding those demands will not release them and let industry go forward except upon such terms as will enable them to continue to draw to themselves the entire surplus that industry can produce above a minimum support of those who do the work of production. The carrying out of this policy impairs both our human energy and our material capital. It leads unavoidably to a periodical stagnation of industry such as we are now experiencing. The remedy is found in a system of credit that will adjust itself to the volume of production needed to meet economic demand for consumption and leave a sufficient surplus over to increase capital proportionately to the increased production needed to cover capital depreciation.

CAPITAL REPRESENTS WORK DONE.

Except for the accumulated charges upon production, wrongly designated as capital, buying power represents work already done, expressed in existing goods or facilities for producing goods, or ability or willingness to do work and deliver goods in the future. A credit system, operated as a service to all industry, will furnish the means for making effective such buying power. In other words, it will enable all the people to exchange goods and services whether for consumption or for further production on a basis of absolute equity. No credit will be extended except for the purpose of producing, buying, or selling something of value. No credit will be denied where it is needed for the production, buying, or selling of anything of value. It follows that disastrous inflation or deflation of credit will be impossible. All of the evils of the present system, the taking of enormous profits when prices are going upwards and the capitalizing of these profits against production when prices are going downward will be a thing of the past. Credit will be exactly determined by the amount of goods produced and exchanged, and, therefore, by the amount of goods necessary to supply all the economic wants of the people, since production is limited by demand.

After we have once extinguished accumulated charges capitalized against production there will be no further capitalization, except in the interest of all the people as producers and consumers.

FUTURE PRODUCTION CAPITALIZED.

The evil of the present system does not lie so much in the fact that the surplus over the minimum requirements for the sustenance of the people is taken as interest or profits, as in the fact of a progressive capitalization against future production, which must finally become so large that it can not be paid. The evil, as we have found, is aggravated by the fact of periodical deflation of prices, thus still further increasing the amount of goods that must be produced to meet these capitalized demands. Inability of productive industry to meet them intensifies and prolongs each period of stagnation, thus further decreasing the quantity of goods produced for the paying of these capitalized demands, for maintaining our capital, and for supplying our present needs. Thus it appears that the present form of credit control must inevitably defeat the purposes of industry instead of aiding them.

LAWFUL MONEY ONLY LOANED.

The bill before us provides for the making of loans, for the rediscounting of obligations in lawful money of the United States, and prohibits the loaning of any other kind of credit. It does not prevent private banking institutions from making loans or rediscounting paper, but if they do so they must lend lawful money and nothing else. The banks can not lend on a basis of bank deposits, except in so far as those deposits consist of lawful money of the United States, issued by the proposed loan bureau under the provisions of this bill. Thus the entire evil of pyramiding bank credit upon bank deposits, which consist largely of the very notes or obligations given for the securing of bank credit, will be done away with. The result will be that we shall always have enough lawful money to carry on all our industrial and financial obligations. In other words, the function of expanding credit now exercised by the banks will be exercised by the sovereignty of the Nation through the proposed loan board. It would be enabled to adjust the volume of credit expressed in lawful money at all times to the volume of production. This can be done by applying indices of production supplied by State and Federal departments, which are becoming every year more accurate and reliable. We shall thus do away with the uncertainties of the present system, in which there is no definite method of adjusting credit to the volume of industry, so as to prevent periods of disastrous inflation and deflation. We shall, in fact, at no distant date, have accurate measures of the relative value of goods and services, and reliable means of adjusting the whole volume of credit to the whole volume of production.

THE REMEDY IS OFFERED.

The bill which is before this conference provides for the liberation of credit for the one true purpose of satisfying the enormous wants of the people. It provides that the Government shall exercise its sovereign function and duty to provide a volume of money adequate to do the business and develop the resources of all the people. It provides that this shall be done by the Government and not by private monopoly. It provides that this money shall be furnished to any and all who are engaged in productive industry and who can give assurance of ability to repay at rates that are estimated, as nearly as may be, to cover the actual cost of the service, and the profits go to the Government to lessen taxes on industry or production. The maximum rate of interest provided by the bill is 4 per cent. The bill does not deprive existing banking institutions of the power of rediscounting or making loans, but it does take from them the power of issuing money. It also prevents private banking institutions from loaning any credit other than lawful money issued under the provisions of this bill, thus abolishing the evil of enormous inflation and contraction of bank credit. Since the bill will stabilize interest charges at 4 per cent, it will reduce by many billions existing charges capitalized against production. Being operated for service to all industries of the people instead of for profit to private bankers, the credit system created by this bill will serve all industries with absolute impartiality. By means of rediscounts it will finance all buying and selling operations. The bill does not, as has been asserted by financial interests, seek to build up new machinery, but utilizes the existing agencies of the Federal Government already in existence.

BUYING POWER RESTORED.

The bill provides for the restoration of the buying power without which it is admitted industry and business can not be revived, because it provides for the release of resources, facilities, and human energy for the production of the things the people need and desire. It will guard against the future disastrous accumulation of capital charges by furnishing the credit which represents the total ability of the people to produce directly through an agency subject to their control. It provides, indeed, the only means by which the charges now capitalized against industry can be met. It therefore will protect and promote the just interests of consumers, producers, and all of those, whether producers or not, who have acquired and hold these charges upon production.

The bill will save the farmers alone in interest charges not less than a quarter of a billion dollars annually. It will save more than this to other industries and business. Basing credit on money representing the productive ability of all the people and nothing else, it will establish a true and stable relation between the volume of production and the volume of credit, and therefore will do away with violent inflation and deflation of money and credit, which is the chief source of our economic ills.

POSTAL SAVINGS UTILIZED.

The bill will remove the present absurd restrictions upon our national postal savings banks, and will make the savings accumulated therein directly available for the uses of beneficial production. By this means the surplus earnings of the people will go directly back into their productive industries, and those savings will be measured in terms of a money that always bears an equitable ratio to the ability of all of the people to produce and will, therefore, represent the equitable claim of each in production on account of such savings, so that the system provided by the bill will be fair to all interests. It will be equally beneficial to the producer, the consumer, and the investor. It will provide alike for the full expression of our mutual buying power, for the supplying of our immediate needs, for the accumulation of necessary capital, and for the equitable distribution of the products of industry according to the relative efficiency and thrift of all of those engaged in the work of production. The Government will never be under the necessity of acquiring gold to stabilize its currency or to meet its own extraordinary needs, because gold will be completely eliminated as a basis of money and credit.

THE GOLD-BASIS FALLACY.

As a matter of fact, the gold basis is now pure fiction. There is not a country in the world that is on a gold basis. The gold that is now accumulating in this country is a serious embarrassment to our international finances and it may in the future turn out to be a cause of tremendous loss, both to the Government and to our industries. The final guaranty that is behind all money is the ability to make it good. A dollar or other money unit is a conventionalized measure of the average buying power at a given time. A material dollar was necessary only when trade relations were so undeveloped that in the majority of cases people could not be sure that that money they received to-day would be good to-morrow, or that the money they received in one place would be good in another place. But since the development of a system of exchange throughout the entire country, and largely throughout the civilized world, and since the development of a practical certainty of the continuance of industrial activities practically along present lines, all that is needed for the expression of values and for the exchange of commodities is an evidence that certain goods or services have been delivered or will be delivered in the future. The possession of a dollar shows that the person possessing it has delivered or has promised to deliver such goods or services. Therefore, when he exchanges a dollar for other goods or services, the next holder knows that he also can exchange it for goods or services at the ratio of value existing at the time. It follows that if the value of the dollar can be stabilized with relation to goods and services it will always be good. Therefore, there will be no need to use gold or any other material for fancied intrinsic value. In fact, we are not now using gold as an intrinsic measure or standard value. It has been shown that the only way it can be used is by pegging the price of gold at a certain place regardless of its so-called intrinsic value. In other words, we have stabilized the price of gold by pegging it to our conventionalized measure of values in terms of commodities, rather than stabilizing the value of our commodity dollar in terms of an assumed unalterable value of gold.

THE GOVERNMENT RECOVERS USURPED POWER.

It appears, then, that the credit system provided by the bill to a great extent makes explicit and gives legal sanction to what is already in practice, but in addition it transfers the control of credit and therefore of industry, from private concerns operating for profit to an agency that shall serve on equal terms all the economic interests of all the people. It takes back from those who have usurped their ownership and control facilities and services absolutely necessary to the efficient and equitable functioning of our economic system. It does this without destroying or impairing individual initiative. It does not even interfere with the activities of private banking institutions for the financing of industry, except that it takes away from them the sovereign power of determining the measure of value of the buying power or producing power of all the people. In fact, by this very restoration of the sovereign power of controlling money and credit to the people, equal opportunity among individuals and associations of individuals is assured. Furthermore, the ultimate interests of those who now control and mismanage credit are protected against themselves, in that the establishment of a credit system operating impartially for the service of all industry is the only means by which production can be resumed, buying power restored, and value of investments maintained. Those holding these charges can hardly complain if, in the bringing about of a readjustment for the protection of all industry, their values are relatively reduced, since they must entirely disappear if such readjustment is not made.

The bill will greatly aid all producers, and especially the farmers, who most stand in need of a better money and credit system. The bill will enable farmers to borrow money on eligible warehouse receipts. The bill provides for loaning on city real estate to 50 per cent of its value and on farms to 60 per cent of their value and 40 per cent on their improvements. The bill provides for loans to renters either on farm or city dwellings under proper regulations and guaranty to 75 per cent of their value. The bill provides for loans to individuals on notes with certain stocks and bonds as securities. The bill provides for the release of lawful money of the United States for legitimate development of the great natural and industrial resources of the country and prohibits the loaning of false money and will thus destroy the means of gambling in farm products as well as in stocks and bonds. The bill provides for destroying inflation of stocks, of stopping trusts and monopoly combinations; and it will stop the gold raid on the Treasury of the United States, for every dollar issued will be full legal tender for all debts public and private. The bill will replace the present debt-manufacturing system controlled by plutocrats with a debt-paying system of honest and real money.

THERE IS NO GOLD STANDARD.

The bill destroys the artificial gold standard, and money is based on real property. The banker and financier can not honestly complain at this for the currency put in circulation now is based largely on credit, and in this connection the Washington Herald editorial said December 7, commenting on the Federal reserve banks:

They authorize currency based on all sorts of value hardly more tangible than that of Muscle Shoals even with the percentage of gold reserve required by law now so vastly exceeded.

It is said that instead of 66 per cent of gold reserve at this time with which to protect the currency the amount in this country does not exceed 10 per cent, and for Europe is even less. Where then is the gold standard? I question whether the countries of the world can ever return to an honest workable gold standard. It can not be said that this is due to a shortage of monetary gold for it is claimed that during the past two years not less than $2,000,000,000 have been added to the monetary gold of the world. The bill does away with the present bank reserves system and keeps all money in circulation, and establishes property as the thing of value and will in a few years free all of our people from financial bondage. These are some of the things the bill attempts to provide in the interest of all our people.

THE BILL INDORSED.

The principle underlying this proposed legislation has been repeatedly indorsed by various groups and organizations during the past few years. The last to indorse the principle was the American Farm Bureau Federation, with a membership of more than a million and a half of the most progressive farmers in this country, in convention recently at Atlanta. They passed resolutions on finance in harmony with the provisions of this bill and appointed a committee—to carefully prepare and present to Congress as the views of our membership a bill which would so amend existing laws as to secure for every American citizen an adequate and proper system of financing which shall be truly national in its character, safe, sound, and administered under the direction of an independent and representative board of directors, representing every phase of national life, so that Congress shall not only "coin money and rate the value thereof" but shall carry out the true spirit of the Constitution by regulating the expansion and reduction of credit, not with a view of private gain but in such a way as to protect the interests of all our citizens and secure and promote the public welfare.

Certainly this resolution in principle is in harmony with the bill now under consideration, and their further resolutions on finance confirms this belief. The other resolutions read:

We ask:

(a) Proper credit for farmers on 12 to 24 months' paper instead of short-term credit now available.

(b) The proper authorization for commodity financing based on warehouse receipts.

(c) Live-stock financing based on a proper pledge.

(d) Personal rural credits secured by proper insurance features and the creating of machinery that will allow cooperative societies to get money direct.

(e) That the Federal Reserve Board direct its policy so that primary production may be given the consideration which it merits.

In fact, in conclusion, I may say the bill when enacted into a law will be of incalculable benefit to all of the people and will be injurious to no legitimate interests.

OF
HON. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
OF KENTUCKY,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, December 14, 1921.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include an able and exhaustive address delivered last night before the Washington Chamber of Commerce by Gov. W. P. G. Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, on the Federal reserve system as related to American business.

The address is as follows:

THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM AS RELATED TO AMERICAN BUSINESS.

(Address by W. P. G. Harding, governor Federal Reserve Board, before the Washington Chamber of Commerce, Dec. 13, 1921.)

Although more than seven years have elapsed since the establishment of the Federal reserve banks, there is still a surprising lack of knowledge of what they really are and of what their proper functions are, not only on the part of the public at large but among business men and bankers as well. Much has been said and written regarding the Federal reserve system which is calculated to create entirely false impressions, and in order to present the subject in a fair and proper light, an effort will be made to describe concisely the fundamental character and some of the distinctive functions of the Federal reserve banks and the Federal reserve system.

The Federal reserve act, which is responsible for the existence of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks, was approved on December 23, 1913, and has at various times since been amended by Congress. The amendments, for the most part, have been the result of suggestions made by the Federal Reserve Board and were designed to render the act more effective.

The general purposes of the act are outlined in its caption, or short title, which is as follows:

"An act to provide for the establishment of Federal reserve banks, to furnish an elastic currency, to afford means of rediscounting commercial paper, to establish a more effective supervision of banking in the United States, and for other purposes."

The need for a more efficient banking system in the United States had been felt for many years. Ever since the year 1890 the subject was one which was discussed frequently at bankers' conventions and at gatherings of commercial bodies, but the event which gave great impetus to the movement for banking reform along constructive lines was the panic of 1907. The following year Congress created a Monetary Commission, which after a long and thorough study of the banking systems of the world submitted an exhaustive report. During the years 1911 and 1912 a committee of the House of Representatives, commonly known as the "Pujo Committee," investigated banking methods in this country and submitted a report.

With this wealth of information in hand, Congress early in the year 1913 took up the matter of banking reform in earnest and the Federal reserve act was put upon the statute books before the close of the year.

This act is very generally admitted to be a great constructive piece of legislation and is praised both by friends and critics of the Federal reserve system; frequently by those who do not understand the act, as well as by those who do. It is because so many have no real conception of the purposes or meaning of the act that much of the criticism which has been directed against its administration has been given a consideration entirely unwarranted by the actual facts.

The Federal reserve act did not establish a central bank. On the contrary, it made possible the establishment of as many as 12 Federal reserve banks, each almost wholly independent of the others in operation as well as in local policies. From a legal standpoint these banks are private corporations, organized under a special act of Congress, namely, the Federal reserve act. They are not in the strict sense of the word Government banks, but are only quasi-Government institutions, in that they are under the general supervision of the Federal Reserve Board and have on their boards of directors three men, representing the public, who are appointed by the Federal Reserve Board.

Each bank has nine directors, and the other six are chosen by the member banks, which are the sole stockholders of the Federal reserve bank. The law does not contemplate active competition by the Federal reserve banks for business with each other or with national banks, State banks, trust companies, and savings banks. Federal reserve banks are not allowed to receive deposits from the public and can accept deposits only from their member banks, from the United States Government, and, solely for the purposes of exchange or collection, from nonmember banks or trust companies. They are not allowed to make loans or advances direct to the public, but can lend only to the United States, to their member banks, subject to certain conditions, for periods not exceeding six months, in anticipation of the collection of taxes or the receipt of assured revenues, to States, counties, municipalities, and other political subdivisions in the United States.

The Federal reserve banks are not permitted by law to make loans direct to individuals, firms, and corporations, and while they can, under certain restrictions, purchase bills of exchange and bankers' acceptances in the open market, their dealings with the public in the matter of loans are limited to the discounting of notes, drafts, and bills of exchange for member banks, all such paper to be indorsed by the member bank offering it. In lending in this way to their member banks, the Federal reserve banks are not authorized by law to use the same discretion and freedom of action that are allowed national banks, State banks, and trust companies, but they must observe the limitations prescribed by law as to the character and maturity of the notes offered them by member banks for discount; except as to notes, drafts, and bills drawn or issued for agricultural purposes or based on live stock, which a Federal reserve bank may discount for a member bank if the maturity does not exceed six months, a Federal reserve bank can not discount any paper for a member bank which has longer than three months to run, exclusive of days of grace.

The law puts a limitation also upon the character of a note which a Federal reserve bank may discount for a member bank. A Federal reserve bank may make advances to its member banks on their promissory notes for a period not exceeding 15 days, provided such promissory notes are secured by the deposit or pledge of bonds or notes of the United States, or by notes, drafts, and bills of exchange or bankers' acceptances, which are themselves eligible for rediscount or purchase by a Federal reserve bank. To be technically eligible for rediscount a note must be indorsed by a member bank, its maturity must be within the time limit prescribed by law, and it must have been issued or drawn for agricultural, industrial, or commercial purposes, and it must also be shown that the proceeds of the note have been used, or are to be used, for such purposes.

As Federal reserve banks are not permitted by law to rediscount any paper which does not bear the indorsement of a member bank, it is clear that in order for a Federal reserve bank to render financial assistance to those engaged in commerce and industry, in agriculture or in the raising of live stock, the loans must first be negotiated with member banks. There are many loans, however, which member banks may legally and properly make which can not be rediscounted with Federal reserve banks for the reason that the law does not admit of the classification of such paper as eligible. A Federal reserve bank, therefore, can not discount a note, paper, however good it may be, which is not technically eligible under the terms of the Federal reserve act; and, on the other hand, it is entirely within its right in declining to discount notes which, even though technically eligible, are not satisfactory from a credit standpoint.

Federal reserve banks are forbidden by law from discounting notes, drafts, or bills covering merely investments, or issued or drawn for the purpose of carrying or trading in stocks, bonds, or other investment securities, except bonds and notes of the Government of the United States.

The Federal reserve act, as amended, has changed both the amount and character of the reserves which all national banks and State member banks must carry against their deposit liabilities. For a long period of years, it has been the practice of American banks to carry as a reserve in cash and on deposit with other banks a certain proportion of their deposits. Before the passage of the Federal reserve act the national banks in the three central reserve cities were required to keep in their own vaults as reserve in gold or lawful money an amount equal to 25 per cent of their net deposits, and in other cities and towns they were required to keep a part of their required reserves in cash in their own vaults and a part on deposit with other banks.

The laws regarding the reserves of State banks varied in the different States. Under the Federal reserve act the percentage of reserve required has been substantially reduced, and as amended no national bank and no State member bank is required to keep any definite amount of cash in its own vaults, and whatever amount of cash is kept on hand by the member banks, as deemed necessary by the judgment and experience of their officers, does not count as part of the banks' lawful reserve.

The entire legal reserve of all member banks must be kept on deposit with the Federal reserve banks. As a consequence, the cash resources of the Federal reserve banks are necessarily very large and their holdings of gold, in particular, constitute a very large proportion of all the gold in the country. The gold held by the Federal reserve banks is equal substantially to all the gold that might have been held by all the banks throughout the country if there had been no Federal reserve banks established.

As the Federal reserve banks are made the sole custodians of the legal reserves of all member banks, the object of Congress in throwing safeguards and limitations around their loan transactions is evident. It is necessary that Federal reserve banks should keep themselves in a "liquid" position—that is, their bills discounted must be of short maturity and should be readily collectible. The strength of the entire banking system of the United States is directly related to the strength of the Federal reserve banks. If the Federal reserve banks should allow themselves to get into a weak, overextended, and unsafe position all member and nonmember banks would be seriously affected.

While Congress has placed upon the Federal Reserve Board the responsibility of defining eligible paper, within the meaning of the Federal reserve act, it has intrusted the management of the Federal reserve banks, under the general supervision of the Federal Reserve Board, to their own directors. Each Federal reserve bank has power to appoint, by its board of directors, such officers and employees as are not otherwise provided for in the Federal reserve act and to define their duties, to prescribe by-laws, not inconsistent with the law, regulating the manner in which its general business may be conducted, and to exercise by its board of directors or duly authorized officers or agents all powers specifically granted by law, and such incidental powers as may be necessary to carry on the business of banking within the limitations prescribed by law.

Each Federal reserve bank is conducted under the supervision and control of its board of directors, who are charged by law to perform the duties usually appertaining to the office of directors of banking associations and to administer the affairs of the bank fairly and impartially and without discrimination in favor of or against any member bank or banks, and, subject to the provisions of law and the orders of the Federal Reserve Board, to extend to each member bank such discounts, advancements, and accommodations as may be safely and reasonably made with due regard for the claims and demands of other member banks.

The Federal Reserve Board is not authorized by law to pass upon the paper which is offered for discount to Federal reserve banks. This is a function which must be exercised by the directors of the Federal reserve bank or by their duly authorized officers or agents. While the law does not prescribe any fixed limit as to the amount of loans that a Federal reserve bank may make to a member bank, it does require that due regard must be given to the claims and demands of other member banks; that is, to their possible needs for credit accommodation. It also provides that a Federal reserve bank must extend to each member bank such discounts and accommodations as may be "safely and reasonably made." This means that the directors of a Federal reserve bank and the officers appointed by them must exercise their best judgment in granting discount accommodations. They must assure themselves that the discounts are such as can be safely made and reasonably made, with due regard to the possible requirements of other member banks which may ask for accommodations later on.

The lending power is not vested in the Federal Reserve Board, and the reason for this is probably twofold. First, the Federal reserve system is not a central bank. It is a regional system, comprising 12 banks. Congress did not intend there should be a centralized control of credits. Second, in a country embracing so vast an area as the United States it would be a very difficult task, if not an impossibility, for a central board to pass intelligently upon the security of the paper offered for discount, which must necessarily come from all sections of the country.

While the Federal reserve act was intended to strengthen the banking system of the United States and to provide ready means of rediscounting certain classes of paper, it is also the evident intention of the act to disturb as little as possible the business of the member and nonmember banks or their dealings with their customers. There is nothing in the Federal reserve act which gives the Federal Reserve Board or a Federal reserve bank any control over the loan policy of any member bank. A Federal reserve bank can not compel a member bank to make a loan which it does not desire to make nor restrain it from making a loan which it wishes to make even though it is forbidden by law.

A Federal reserve bank can not lend directly to the customers of a member bank, nor does it, in fact, take the initiative in making loans to a member bank for the purpose of enabling the member bank to distribute the funds so advanced to its customers. The Federal reserve bank lends to the member bank against transactions already made for the purpose of enabling the member bank to restore its reserve to the legal requirement after the reserve has been impaired or is about to be impaired because of increased loans and deposits.

There is a very general popular misconception regarding this, and it may be that some of the member banks are responsible for this misunderstanding without being actuated, however, by sinister motives. Banks, as a rule, do not like to admit to customers that they are short of loanable funds nor do they wish to arouse enmity in declining to make loans or in asking for a reduction of a loan already made.

There are some bank officers who are able frankly to decline an application for a loan in a way which leaves no sting, but which, on the contrary, gives the applicant the impression that the rejection of his application is a favor to him. But not all bank officers have such tact. Some are frank enough, but their bluntness hurts the feelings of the would-be borrower. It is not unusual, therefore, for bank officers in declining loans to look for a buffer or some one to whom they can "pass the buck." In the old days the board of directors was made useful in this capacity.

Nowadays, however, bank officers find in the Federal Reserve Board or the Federal reserve bank a much more satisfactory buffer than a local board of directors. In many cases, in agricultural sections particularly, banks have found it very convenient to "pass the buck" to the Federal reserve bank or the Federal Reserve Board, and have stated to a borrower or would-be borrower that they would like to grant the extension asked for or make the loan desired, but the Federal reserve would not permit it. Such a procedure has a tendency to relieve the situation as far as the local bank is concerned, but it is certainly unfair to the Federal reserve system. This evasion of responsibility has subjected the Federal reserve banks to a great amount of unjust criticism and has given the public a wrong impression of the authority and attitude of the Federal reserve banks and the Federal Reserve Board. It has aroused indignation, which is entirely natural in the circumstances, and has caused much correspondence with the Federal Reserve Board direct and with Congressmen and United States Senators, whose ire has been aroused because of these alleged arbitrary methods.

It is entirely true that a Federal reserve bank, mindful of its responsibility under the law and acting in accordance with the dictates of ordinary banking prudence, may have had occasion to call the attention of some of its larger borrowing banks to their large discount lines, which have run in some cases over a period of years without being reduced, and have called the attention of the borrowing banks to the necessity of working themselves into a stronger position. But in no case within the knowledge of the Federal Reserve Board has any Federal reserve bank undertaken to say to a member bank what particular loans it should call or ask to have reduced.

I will give you a concrete example. In a southern State there is a national bank which has for a long time been a large and continuous borrower at the Federal reverse bank, the amount of its rediscounts being several times greater than its capital stock and its fair proportion of the loanable funds of the reserve bank. It seems that this bank has made frequent promises to reduce its discount line to a more reasonable sum, but as it collected notes it would constantly send in others for rediscount.

Here is a notice that this bank appears to have been sending to some of its borrowing customers, which reads as follows:

"Your note for $—— falls due ——.

"Our Federal reserve bank owns this note, having rediscounted it for us. As it has been renewed several times, they are insisting on a payment of $—— or more. It is absolutely necessary to arrange this note on the day of its maturity.

"Yours, truly,

"——, Cashier."

When the Federal reserve bank was informed that these notices were being sent out, it immediately called the attention of the member bank to the fact that it had not insisted upon the payment of any particular note and directed that this form of notice be discontinued. The Federal Reserve Board has received many complaints growing out of incidents of this kind.

It is gratifying, however, to know that the general sentiment toward the Federal reserve system is not molded by ignorant or prejudiced critics, but that there is throughout the country a high appreciation of the splendid service it has rendered during the trying times through which we have passed. I wish to avail myself of this opportunity to say a word of commendation of the manner in which the officers and directors of the 12 Federal reserve banks have performed their arduous duties and of their skill and courage in dealing with the many grave and complex problems, some local, others national in scope, with which they have been confronted during the acute world crisis, which, happily, is now a thing of the past, as far as this country is concerned.

It is my sober conviction that basic financial conditions in this country are very much better than they were 12 months ago. There are many surface indications which bear out this statement, and those who know the general situation appreciate this fact.

Business has passed through the primary stage, the acute period of reaction, but we have not yet reached "normalcy," for the readjustment has not been uniform and there is not yet established a natural and equitable basis for the exchange of goods for goods or goods for services. For example, farm products in many cases are now below the prewar level, and in some instances below the cost of production. Prices of some manufactured goods have declined sharply, while others have not, and the general price index and the cost of living are still much above the 1913 level. Manufacturers and merchants are vitally interested in conditions in the agricultural sections. The farmer is the great consumer of manufactured goods. His purchasing power at present is much impaired, partly because of the lower exchange value of his products and partly because of unliquidated indebtedness. Until the purchasing power of the farmer improves it will, of course, be idle to look for any rapid or substantial improvement in domestic trade.

I think, however, that the outlook for the farmers is more hopeful. They have, no doubt, been benefited through the activities of the War Finance Corporation, which, although it can not make direct loans to individuals, is rediscounting paper for banks which, because of long maturity, is not eligible for rediscount with the Federal reserve banks. While the agricultural situation is a most important factor in our domestic trade, there are other things which must be taken into account. The decline in prices of manufactured goods has not been as great as the shrinkage in value of raw materials, and the retail price index does not show a drop corresponding to that of the wholesale price index. This indicates that manufacturing costs have not declined in proportion to primary production costs and that the costs of distribution and of doing business are disproportionately high.

The remuneration of farm labor depends mainly upon the price of farm products, but in manufacturing industries labor costs are not always immediately related to the cost of the raw material used in those industries, nor, indeed, to the price of the finished product. Other important elements of cost are taxes, freight rates, rents, and fuel. The Federal Government must necessarily raise large revenues in order to meet obligations incurred as a result of the war, and our system of taxation is designed to levy the highest rates on large incomes.

This taxation can be escaped altogether or in part by investing in State and municipal bonds, which are exempt from the income tax, and the ability of municipalities to sell their obligations more readily because of this fact has had a tendency to increase the volume of their indebtedness. Consequently, local taxation has increased materially, and unless the issue of tax-exempt obligations is checked the ultimate results are likely to be serious.

Operating costs of the railroads are much above normal and transportation rates have been increased as an offset.

Rents are high because of increased taxes, higher upkeep costs, and the inadequate supply of houses occasioned by the reduced building operations during the past four or five years.

Fuel is high, due partly to increased taxes, higher costs of production, and increased costs of transportation and distribution.

The restoration of normal conditions in agriculture, commerce, and industry depends to a great extent upon the reduction of these essential items of expense.

Much depends also upon the results of the Conference for Limitation of Armaments now being held in this city. This conference is the most important which has ever been held in this country, and if the program submitted by the Secretary of State is adopted it will have a profound effect upon the finances of the world. In fact, the proceedings of the conference up to this time and the proposed treaty between the four great powers which control the Pacific are accepted as harbingers of peace and have had already a stabilizing effect. The notable advance in sterling exchange, which began with the assembling of the conference, is not a mere coincidence.

When great nations enter into competition with each other in the extension of huge naval and military establishments, the large sums necessary for these additions and maintenance must be met by taxation in some form or other. Money expended for armament is devoted to nonproductive and destructive purposes. These sums released for constructive or productive use in the creation of new wealth will stimulate the revival of business activity.

The position of the United States with respect to world affairs has entirely changed since 1914. Up to that time we were a debtor Nation. When the war broke out in Europe the United States was a debtor on the world's balance sheet to the extent of probably $4,000,000,000, representing amounts due on current account plus foreign investments in this country. Now we are a creditor Nation in a large amount. Besides the sum of $10,000,000,000 advanced by the United States to nations associated with us in the war, there is a large balance due this country as a result of private trade transactions, which has been variously estimated from a billion and a half to three and one-half billion dollars.

Agriculture, industry, and commerce in the United States all have a vital interest in foreign trade. We produce a large exportable surplus of farm products and of manufactured goods, and any curtailment in the foreign demand for these products is immediately reflected in our domestic trade.

During the past year we have received large additions to our stock of gold by reason of importations from foreign countries. These importations do not represent sums for account of central banks, which have, as a rule, increased their gold holdings since the outbreak of the war, but they represent widely scattered holdings from practically all countries which have been sent here in payment of pressing obligations or for the purchase of supplies urgently needed.

It is evident, however, that a normal volume of foreign trade can not be supported by shipments of gold from abroad. In ordinary circumstances international trade is based upon the exchange of goods and services, actual transfers of gold representing only a very small proportion of the total volume of business and being made merely for the purpose of stabilizing the exchanges.

Most of the business troubles through which we have passed and which still confront us to-day can be attributed either to the war or to the course of events during the year 1919. It was realized that the signing of the armistice which ended the war from a military standpoint did not end it in a financial sense, and during the early months of the year 1919 there was a lull and much hesitation in business. The successful flotation, however, of the Victory loan in May of that year was regarded as the end of the war in a financial sense and a period of great activity set in.

It was evident that four years of war had greatly impaired the productive capacity of Europe and had reduced almost to the vanishing point stocks of goods and supplies of all kinds. There was a general impression that there was a world-wide shortage of goods, and that Europe in replenishing her supplies must continue to draw heavily upon the productive capacity of the United States, just as had been the case ever since the year 1915. This impression was deeply engrafted upon the minds of the public, and for a time European needs were so urgent that they had to be supplied at any sacrifice. At the same time a substantial part of the sum which during the war the United States had agreed to advance to foreign nations was still unexpended, and these funds were used during the year 1919 in payment of goods exported to Europe.

Many shrewd business men looked forward confidently to several years of commercial and industrial activity, and made their plans upon the assumption that prices would either advance or remain stable and that a return to the prewar level or a serious decline in the immediate future was most improbable. Farmers incurred obligations for additional land at a valuation based upon the commodity prices then existing, merchants extended their business, and manufacturers prepared to increase their productive capacity by making additions to their plants, regardless of the fact that such additions could be made only at costs much higher than normal.

The consensus of public opinion was that we had entered into an era of high prices and that there would be for some time a serious shortage of goods. Many jobbers called in their salesmen and were obliged to scale down the orders which poured in by every mail. Prices advanced week by week, and many producers and merchants were reluctant to sell, for advancing prices were accompanied by higher wages and greater production costs.

Credit was freely used, not only in production at high cost but in withholding goods from the market, and inventories and bank statements everywhere showed an expanded condition which would have been regarded as unthinkable a few years before.

Looking backward it is easy to point out the essential fallacy in the position which was taken and to explain the logical and inevitable reaction which took place, a reaction, however, which many did not foresee until too late. This fallacy lay in the incorrect estimate of the shortage of goods.

The normal relationship between production and consumption was accepted at a time when conditions were anything but normal. There was, indeed, no question as to the desperate need of Europe for American goods and supplies, but proper consideration was not given to the flexibility of consumptive requirements. What a man can not get at all he must do without, and when he can not obtain all that he needs he must be satisfied with a moiety. The mere need for goods, however urgent, does not create an economic demand. There must be an ability on the part of those needing goods to satisfy the need, either by exchanging other goods, by rendering service, by paying cash, or by tendering some acceptable form of credit obligation.

Millions of people in Europe were obliged to deny themselves a part of their accustomed food supply, to forego purchases of clothing and other things which ordinarily would be regarded as absolutely necessary. Luxuries were impossible and in many cases articles so classed were sacrified in order to provide necessities.

The effect of high prices in this country was reflected finally in reduced consumption, and in the latter part of March, 1920, those who had dreams of a long continuance of the conditions which had existed up to that time were rudely awakened by the collapse of the silk market in Japan. Public opinion began to undergo a change, and public opinion is a powerful force, more potent than banking boards, than legislative bodies, and Government itself. The curtailment of buying became more and more noticeable. What has since been referred to as the "buyers' strike" manifested itself throughout the country and in quick succession the drastic reactions in commodity prices began to take place. Many who had been eager to buy withdrew from the market and many who had been reluctant to sell became anxious to dispose of their goods.

Banks began to find that loans which they had thought could be repaid at any time desired could not be collected in the new circumstances and must be carried along. Recourse was had in increasing degree to the Federal reserve system, which responded to all legitimate demands and which should be credited with preventing what would otherwise have developed into a most disastrous money panic.

During the year 1920, when these drastic changes in price levels were taking place, the total earning assets of the Federal reserve banks, which include rediscounts for member banks, increased from $3,039,000,000 at the end of January to $3,256,000,000 at the end of October. At the same time there was not only no contraction in Federal reserve note currency but, on the contrary, there was an almost continuous increase in the volume of Federal reserve notes in circulation, the amount increasing from $2,844,000,000 on January 23 to $3,404,000,000 on December 23, 1920, a record high mark.

These figures should be impressed upon the minds of the public, for the reckless and unwarranted statement is often made that the Federal reserve authorities deliberately set out to bring about deflation and to accomplish this purpose caused sharp curtailment of credit and drastic contraction of the currency.

The events of the past two years have demonstrated the fact that there is no unalterable relationship between commodity prices and the volume of credit and currency. It is not the function of the Federal reserve system nor of any banking system to attempt to fix or control prices and Federal reserve discount rates have never been established with that idea in view. Banks should be concerned with prices only in so far as the security of their loans may be involved and they are interested more in the stability of prices and their margin of collateral than in the price level itself. Banks do not create general conditions, but they must adjust themselves to changing conditions, which in recent eventful months have been brought about by unseen and irresistible forces throughout the world.

Early in September there was much rejoicing throughout the Southern States because of the marked advance in the price of cotton. This advance is not due to any increase in the loans of the Federal reserve banks nor to any expansion of the currency. As a matter of fact, the amount of Federal reserve notes in circulation on September 15, when cotton was selling at about 24 cents a pound, was about $500,000,000 less than when cotton was selling at 11 cents a pound early last spring. The advance in the price of cotton was due to economic causes and to the operation of the inevitable law of supply and demand. After the report of the Department of Agriculture, early in September, the world awakened to the fact that the present cotton crop is abnormally small, and it was thought at one time that less than 7,000,000 bales would be produced. As the ginners' reports were made it became evident that the Department of Agriculture had underestimated the size of the present crop of cotton and the price declined 4 or 5 cents a pound.

This decline took place notwithstanding the reduction which was made about the same time in the discount rates of all Federal reserve banks, including those in the South. The fact should be emphasized that the net advance which has taken place in the price of cotton has been due not to credit or currency expansion but rather to the deflation of the anticipated supply of cotton and to the probability of increased consumption.

There is perhaps even greater confusion in the public mind regarding the issue of Federal reserve notes than there is regarding the rediscounting functions of the Federal reserve banks. There are some who appear to have an impression that the Federal Reserve Board has power to expand or contract the currency of the country at will and that it has exercised this power in a reckless and arbitrary manner. While the law prescribes that the Federal Reserve Board shall have the right, acting through the Federal reserve agent, to grant in whole or in part or to reject entirely the application of any Federal reserve bank for Federal reserve notes, it has never exercised this right. On the contrary, it has always approved promptly every application which has been made for the issue of Federal reserve notes. One of the purposes of the Federal reserve act, as stated in its caption, is to furnish an elastic currency, but there are many whose idea of elasticity is continuous stretching.

Currency to be really elastic must be susceptible of expansion or the reverse, as the needs of industry and commerce may require. Many believe that there was a prescribed contraction of the currency during the year 1920, determined upon in order to reduce prices. The expansion of nearly $600,000,000 in Federal reserve note circulation which actually took place during that year shows that the impression is absolutely unwarranted.

An increase or decrease in the volume of Federal reserve notes outstanding is not the result of any preordained policy or premeditated design, for the volume of Federal reserve notes in circulation depends entirely upon the activity of business or upon the kind of activity which calls for currency rather than book credits.

Federal reserve notes can be issued only against collateral in an amount equal to the sum of the Federal reserve notes applied for, which collateral security must be notes and bills discounted or acquired by the banks or gold or gold certificates. The law requires each Federal reserve bank to maintain a reserve of 40 per cent in gold against its Federal reserve notes in actual circulation.

During the present year the loans of the Federal reserve banks to their member banks have decreased by about $1,550,000,000, and as the notes discounted with Federal reserve banks have been paid off Federal reserve note currency has come back to the banks and in the absence of a demand for it has not been reissued. Upon payment of commercial paper which has been deposited to secure Federal reserve notes there necessarily results either an immediate return of an equivalent amount of notes to the bank or an automatic increase in the percentage of gold reserve available for their redemption. Federal reserve notes are not legal tender, nor do they count as reserve money for member banks. They are issued only as a need for them develops, and as they become redundant in any locality they are returned for credit or for redemption to the Federal reserve banks or to the Treasury at Washington. Thus there can not be at any time more Federal reserve notes in circulation then the needs of the country at the prevailing level of prices and wages require, and as the demand abates the volume of notes outstanding will be correspondingly reduced through redemption. The increased volume of Federal reserve notes in circulation from 1917 to the end of the year 1920 was, in so far as it was not the result of direct exchanges for gold and gold certificates, the effect of advancing wages and prices and not their cause, just as the reduction which has taken place during the present year is the result of lower prices and smaller volume of business rather than their cause.

Under the Federal reserve system, as business expands, as labor is more fully employed, and as production increases and distribution becomes more active, there follows a demand for greater discount accommodations and a need for more currency, and the increased volume of discounts furnishes a means of providing the increased volume of currency required.

The Federal reserve banks hold to-day a gold reserve of about $2,850,000,000 and a combined reserve against member banks' deposits and note issues of slightly more than 73 per cent. Or if the legal minimum reserve of 35 per cent be set up against deposits there would remain a gold reserve of slightly more than 100 per cent against Federal reserve notes outstanding.

For some months past there has been a marked easing in domestic rates of interest. Notwithstanding unfavorable features in our revenue laws the investment market is now absorbing securities at reasonable rates which could not have been considered a few months ago. Market quotations of Liberty bonds have steadily advanced until they are now approaching par. Good railroad and industrial bonds have also appreciated, and there have been some noticeable advances in standard stocks.

In his annual report just sent to Congress the Secretary of the Treasury remarks that the advance in the price of Liberty bonds and Victory notes is in part a reflection of easier credit conditions and lower interest rates, though increased buying on the part of investors and better distribution of the public debt doubtless account for much of the improvement. High commodity prices and great business activity usually mean lower prices for bonds and other securities yielding a fixed income, while reduced commodity prices and lower money rates bring higher market prices for bonds.

The question is often asked, Why, in view of our enormous stock of gold, American bankers do not avail themselves of the opportunity of making the United States the world's banker? There is no question that our present gold supply is far beyond our domestic requirements, nor is there any doubt that a great stimulus would be given to our foreign trade were it practicable for American bankers to engage in world finance in a large way.

As high-grade American securities yield a lower income rate, the attention of investors will be directed more toward European securities. Investments in foreign properties and securities and long-time loans abroad will improve foreign exchange conditions, but before such investments or loans will be made in very large volume it will be necessary to inspire American investors with confidence in the political and economic stability of Europe.

A successful outcome of the Conference for the Limitation of Armaments should do much to inspire confidence in the political stability of the world, and when the Governments of the various countries in Europe balance their budgets by limiting the amount of their expenditures to the revenues received from taxation and other sources and discontinue the emission of new issues of uncovered paper money, there should follow a restoration of confidence in the economic and financial condition of Europe. Judging from our own history after the Civil War, many years will doubtless elapse before some European countries can restore the normal value of their currencies; but if the violent fluctuations in exchange which have marked the past two years can be prevented in future and a stabilization on some basis accomplished, it will be possible to engage in commercial and financial transactions with Europe on a much larger scale than at present. If we wish to sell our surplus products abroad, it is evident that we must continue to exchange commodities with foreign countries, for where we sell we must buy. A curtailment of production to meet merely American requirements would involve widespread unemployment and would invite disaster. On the other hand, because of the great depreciation in the currencies of many foreign countries their labor costs are much less than ours, and partly because of this fact and partly because of the high premium on dollar exchange they are able to undersell us in our own markets. One of the great problems of our national legislators to-day is to frame a tariff which will prevent the dumping upon our markets of foreign goods, without at the same time erecting a tariff wall so high that our exports will be greatly reduced because of the inability of foreign nations to trade with us.

In conclusion, a word more may be added concerning the Federal reserve system. A Federal reserve bank is what its name implies. It is a reserve bank. It holds on deposit the entire legal reserve of its member banks. It is not authorized by law to receive deposits from the public nor to lend directly to individuals, firms, or corporations. It can rediscount paper of short maturity for member banks with their indorsement; that is, notes, drafts, and bills of exchange issued or drawn for agricultural, industrial, or commercial purposes, or the proceeds of which have been used or are to be used for such purposes. Based in part on the security of such paper, it can put in circulation Federal reserve notes in sufficient volume to meet the requirements of ordinary business transactions or of an acute emergency.

But the Federal reserve system should not be expected to accomplish the impossible. It is not a panacea for all economic and financial ills, and it can not, however skillful its administration may be, prevent periods of depression in the future, although it can do much to modify them. Other nations, such as Great Britain and France, with their great central banking institutions, have always had their years of prosperity and their periods of depression, although they have been free from the money panics which we formerly had in this country as a result of our inadequate banking system, and which we would undoubt have had in the most aggravated degree a year or so ago but for the efficiency and stabilizing influence of the Federal reserve system.

There are well-defined cycles in business. We have the short and frequently recurring cycles incident to the changes of the seasons, and all history shows that there are longer swings or periods of prosperity and depression, the rotation being about as follows: (1) Business activity and increasing production; (2) excessive expansion and speculation, followed hitherto by panic and forced liquidation; (3) a long period of slow liquidation, business depression, and stagnation; and (4) revival.

There are many indications that the beginning of revival is not far distant. When it does definitely set in, it will be followed in due course by a period of prosperity. While the losses during the past two years have been great, much experience has been gained, and while experience is not transferable, except perhaps to a limited extent, the new generation of business men has several years of business activity ahead of it.

In the light of this experience we should remember when we again enter into a period of full prosperity that a reaction will follow sooner or later, and if the flow of the incoming tide can be controlled so that the crest may not be reached too rapidly nor rise too high the subsequent reaction will be less severe and the next period of industrial and commercial activity and general prosperity will be marked by saner methods, greater achievement along constructive lines, and be a longer duration than any which we have had before. We should not forget that the ebb of the tide is always equal to the flow, and that the ebb in the Bay of Fundy, where the tide rises high-set, is far greater than in safer harbors, where the tidal fluctuations are more moderate.

HON. STUART F. REED,

OF WEST VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, December 15, 1921.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following address:

ADDRESS OF HON. GUY D. GOFF, ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES, DELIVERED AT CLARKSBURG, W. VA., DECEMBER 4, 1921, UNDER THE AUSPICES OF LODGE NO. 482, BENEVOLENT PROTECTIVE ORDER OF ELKS.

Thank you one and all for this great privilege and for the cordial and friendly greeting you so generously extend. It would be difficult to address such a gathering on such an occasion without recalling the debt of gratitude I owe to Clarksburg and the departed whom you honor to-day. Nothing could have been more satisfying than this day here. It is more like a pleasant dream hurrying to the land of shadow than the satisfying reality it is. I recall many of you with gratitude, as well as your fathers and mothers who were my friends. Since I left in 1884 my visits have been few and far between, but during all of the intervening years my heart has been with you and my hand in yours. In my childhood days Clarksburg was a typical border State community. Here the passion of Civil War has left its scars and indelible marks. However, the people were typically human and always hospitable. They were great in their capacity to help. They were great in their maxims of love and generosity, and they necessarily impressed their convictions and patience upon the souls of all who came in contact with them. As I look back, I would say that my experience here taught me that it is not life that counts, but the courage you bring to it—the spirit that enables you to do the very best you can just when and where you are. This community gave me, I am grateful to say, more than an education. It affected and shaped my subconscious mind. It has always helped me to see straight and, I hope, true. It impressed upon me this fact: That the essential element of all life is conduct, and that conduct springs from what you believe, what you cling to, what you love, and what you yearn for in faith and resolution; and as I reflect upon my boyhood days here, I recognize with gratitude that it was the Clarksburg atmosphere, the mental balance that enables you to see things as straight as a ray of light, and to know no fear except the fear of doing wrong, that endears this old town to us all.

I would be false to my best impulses if I failed to bring my tribute and lay it upon the graves of those whom we mourn to-day. Death always preaches an impressive sermon and feelingly teaches us what shadows we are and what shadows we pursue. We understand death for the first time when he puts his hand upon those whom we love. We often hear the respect paid the dead disparaged and undervalued. It is called a poor substitute for the just treatment of the living. To me it is most laudable, everything it does, the best it can and the truest judgments of mankind. Men see clearly and feel rightly at the grave as nowhere else. Here clouds and mists disappear and prejudices are carried away. We know little of each other even under conditions of the greatest intimacy. In our social, business, and political relations we mingle with men who can never know us and whom we can never know. Our real world is within ourselves, and that world is ever sacred in its secrecy. Across its portals none other may ever step, except to catch but the imperfect reflections of another soul, the twilight that but faintly heralds the glow of the real day. And then in the presence of death, in a spirit of helplessness, touched by grief and inspired by our affections, we seek to build a monument in our hearts to our departed friends, and for its structure we draw from the depths of our nature the noblest and the best of our impulses. Their eyes can never behold it, and neither do they need or heed our eulogies. But we do benefit ourselves and help the world by extolling the lofty virtues of those who have forever passed from our sight. A great divine has said:

"Death did not first strike Adam, the first sinful man, nor Cain, the first hypocrite, but Abel, the innocent and righteous. The first soul that met death overcame death; the first soul parted from earth went to heaven. Death does not argue displeasure, because he whom God loved best dies first, and the murderer is punished with living."

In the suddenness of it, the occasion of it, the environment of it, death is always a tragedy. And yet it has nothing terrible which life has not made so, because no man who is fit to live need fear to die. We are told it is the soul that has fled when we stand in the presence of the earthly tenement.

So coldly sweet—so deadly fair,
We start, for soul is wanting there.

We never forget the genial, smiling, courteous, vigorous, manly forms of our departed friends. Death always lies in ambush beyond the remotest thought of those whom it attacks. It seldom sends a herald to warn.

How pale appeared
Those clay cold cheeks where grace and vigor glowed—
O dismal spectacle, how humble now
Lies that ambition which was late so proud.

Every environment produces its type, every period its men. Our people, our institutions measured by the world's standards have been more than successful. Our country has, beyond precedent, been fruitful in successful men and in all lines of endeavor. The right of initiation has been without restraint. Birth has neither given the rank nor fixed the station. Every path leading to a goal has been free to every foot. Our country and our flag have been the emblems of individual opportunity. Our great and worthy men have risen by native power. Family name has not been a guaranty, nor has poverty and obscurity been a bar to the future of the American child. Our friends were charged with energy, inspired by hope, and steadied by determination. After all, the ideals of life are the essentials of life. Our ideals are the standards by which we gauge our character. They measure the length, the breadth, the height, and the depth of our thoughts and our purposes, our impulses, and our conduct. As we think, we act. The thoughts that come out of the heart and the brain move us to action. These acts beget our characters, and our characters are the causes of whatever commendation or condemnation we receive from friends and foes.

There is no conquerer save death. It is a fearful thing. In the midst of circumstances that seem to defy destiny, the gaunt, grizzly, invisible champion of the grave stalks forth; a sudden swoop of the scythe and the highest and strongest fall forever. And so from life to death, from existence to immortality, from achievement to history, our dearest and our closest friends without warning, amid genuine sorrow, pass away.

How wonderful is Death;
Death and his brother Sleep!

A modern author has aptly said:

"The progression of man through the circle of evil is marked by three infelicities—necessity, oblivion, and death. The deaths which follow are changes, they are just so many escapes from their power."

The philosophy of death and the state which ensued was naturally a matter of much speculation by the learned men of antiquity. Death, says the elder D'Israeli, was the only divinity to which the ancients never sacrificed, convinced, as they were, that no human being could turn aside its stroke. They raised altars to fever, to misfortune, and to all of the evils of life, for these might change. In the beautiful fables of their allegorical religion, Death was the daughter of Night and the sister of Sleep. We find in the old Latin chroniclers a delicacy about using the word "death." They did not say that their friend had died but that he had lived. We honor and profit by these philosophical speculations, but we are happy in the better belief that we can say of our departed friends, "They lived."

The Great Apostle has taught us that "Since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead"; and that "This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality."

I read the other night Lamartine's account of the deaths of Mirabeau and of Vergniaud, the philosophic deputy of the Gironde. He speaks of Mirabeau's dying words:

Environ me with music,
Sprinkle me with incense,
And crown me with flowers,
That I may pass into eternal sleep.

And then taking up the story of the last night passed by the condemned deputy in the old conciergerie, he quotes him as saying:

"Death is but the greatest act of life, since it gives birth to a higher state of existence. Were it not thus, there would be something greater than God. It would be just man immolating himself uselessly and helplessly for his country. This supposition is full of blasphemy, and I repel it with contempt and horror. No; Vergniaud is not greater than God, but God is more just than Vergniaud and will not suffer him to ascend the scaffold but to justify him in future ages."

Here we have in contrast philosophy and faith. Mirabeau going down into the gloom of the grave, without hope and full of blasphemy for the religion and teaching of the Nazarene. Vergniaud, in the sight of the guillotine, condemned to die, reproving the sceptical levity of his colleagues, and proclaiming his unfaltering belief in immortality. It was Rousseau who said, "If Socrates died like a philosopher, Jesus Christ died like a God."

This may or may not be man's philosophy of life, depending on his religious views. It may not be, because no man can say he knows. All that man can do is to turn and face the battle, enter the contest, struggle and toil, and do the very best he can. In the hour of sorrow—

Memory is the only friend
That grief can call her own.

And yet our lives are filled with the voices of the dead. They speak from records, books, and associations. The dead are always with us. We converse with them, live with them, and always love them in our busy, craving, absorbing life. How true it is, and how we appreciate its meaning, "That to live in hearts we leave behind is not to die." And is it not a compensation that in the grave our rest is undisturbed? No sorrow, no slander, no venom, and no temptations. The ocean that separates this world from the next no human eye can penetrate. The shadow of the future is on the shore of the present, and what lies in that shadow none of us can tell. But would it not be comforting and beautifully sweet if on this ocean that divides time from eternity and on which souls are the ships of passage, we could freight these spiritual vessels with messages of love and good cheer to that "bourne from which no traveler returns"? We would send letters fragrant with the tenderest thoughts of our hearts. We would send flowers as beautiful as any in paradise. But we find it all a dream. We look at the sea and it is shoreless. It passes our comprehension and we accept with resignation what we know is "the inevitable."

The poets for ages have sung of the suddenness of death when it comes to a man full of life and vigor, to one still ready and willing to do a man's part in the world of men, yet the Greeks personified death by a beautiful boy crowned with immortal youth, and, after all, in meditation and reflection that ideal seems most fitting.

Be strong!
We are not here to play, to dream, to drift;
We have hard work to do and loads to lift.
Shun not the struggle, face it; 'tis God's gift.

Be strong!
Say not the days are evil. Who's to blame?
And fold the hands and acquiesce. O shame!
Stand up, speak out and bravely, in God's name.

Be strong!
It matters not how deep intrenched the wrong,
How hard the battle goes, the day how long;
Faint not; fight on! To-morrow comes the song.

Indeed, judging my departed friends from my intercourse with them, I know of no man to whom could be more aptly applied the shrewd judgment of Horace Walpole:

"To act with common sense, according to the moment, is the best wisdom I know; and the best philosophy to do one's duties, take the world as it comes, submit respectfully to one's lot, place the goodness that has given us so much happiness with it, whatever it is, and despise affectation."

"In the midst of life we are in death." Death is an abiding presence. The All Wise Being has made every living thing subject to death, and possibly his rational creatures in order to teach them the greatest of all truths. The very fact that man is an heir of pain and death is no doubt given him that he may learn that life is only the beginning of his existence. The mute lips of our dead can send us no message. They have passed through the gates and are to-day solving the great mystery. Speaking of death, Shakespeare says:

Here lurks no treason, here no envy dwells,
Here grows no damned grudges, here no storms—
No noise but silence, and eternal sleep.

It has been consolingly said by a great philosopher, and I always read him with a new meaning, that—

"It can not be that earth is man's only abiding place.
"We were born for a higher destiny than earth.
"It can not be that life is a bubble cast up by the ocean of eternity to float a moment upon its waves and sink into nothingness.
"Else why these high and glorious aspirations which leap like angels from the temple of our hearts, forever wandering unsatisfied? Why is it that the rainbow and clouds come over with a beauty that is not of earth and then pass off to leave us to muse on their loveliness? Why is it that the stars hold their festival around the midnight throne or set above the grasp of our limited facilities, forever mocking us with their unapproachable glory?
"There is a realm where the rainbow never fades, where the stars spread out before us like the islands that slumber on the ocean, and where the beautiful things that pass before us like shadows will stay forever in our presence.
"And, finally, why is it that the bright forms of human beauty are presented to our view and taken from us, leaving the thousand streams of our affections to flow back in Alpine torrents upon our hearts?"

But, soothing as such reflections are, none of us knows what awaits us in the hereafter, in that unknown to which we all in our turn shall go as a bird flies from the lighted room out into the darkness of the night. It may be we shall realize the Buddhist hope and spend the illimitable future in calm and passionless contemplation of the worlds below us, without longing and without desire. Perhaps there awaits us the heavens of Mohammed, with their barbaric splendors, or it yet may be as so many of us hope and believe, that redeemed and sanctified we shall sit at the feet of the crucified Savior, the Christ, resplendent in the ineffable glory of His divine presence. It is not given us to know these things, but it is given us to realize and to remember until we go to join the silent majority, silent to all human ears, that if we would plant our feet upon the eternal rock we must keep our eyes turned upward and ever press forward in that direction. We must never evade a responsibility. We must cultivate courage and the highest moral character. We must be absolutely, unflinchingly honest. We must be honest with ourselves, honest with our fellow man, honest with our country. If we do we shall typify all that is best in American life—all that can be required in any Christian life. The profound philosophy of Victor Hugo, reflecting as it does the thought of one habituated to meditation, is worthy of deep consideration:

"I feel in myself the future life. I am like a forest once cut down; the new shoots are stronger and livelier than ever. I am rising, I know, toward the sky. The sunshine is on my head. The earth gives me its generous sap, but heaven lights me with the reflection of unknown worlds.
"You say the soul is nothing but the resultant of the bodily powers. Why, then, is my soul more luminous when my bodily powers begin to fail? Winter is on my head, but eternal spring is in my heart. I breathe at this hour the fragrance of the lilacs, the violets, and the roses as at 20 years. The nearer I approach the end the plainer I hear around me the immortal symphonies of the worlds which invite me. It is marvelous, yet simple. It is a fairy tale, and it is history.
"For half a century I have been writing my thoughts in prose and in verse; history, philosophy, drama, romance, tradition, satire, ode, and song—I have tried all. But I feel I have not said the thousandth part of what is in me. When I go down to the grave I can say, like many others, 'I have finished my day's work.' But I can not say, 'I have finished my life.' My day's work will begin again next morning. The tomb is not a blind alley; it is a thoroughfare. It closes on the twilight; it opens on the dawn."

Turning to where man meets man in the absorbing activities of life, where can we go, to whom can we point for an example in higher degree of those elements of heart and soul and courtesy, cheerfulness, and charity, in private and business relations, and in winning personality, than our departed friends possessed. They had a love of truth which ambition for success in the strenuous contests of life never caused them to violate. They were conservative in a high degree without a taint of want of courage. No storm of passion unbalanced them. Those whom we now commemorate possessed the well-balanced character of true greatness which everyone admired and everyone loved as well.

It seems upon such an occasion that silence is the most eloquent tribute, and yet I hesitate to close. Eulogists say that these occasions should be lessons to us, the living. But how swiftly they come. Hardly time for a recess between—as all of us are called upon to view "the innumerable caravan" as it crosses the "covered bridge." There is so much in general which might be said. Veiled in the background are whisperings, gentle and persistent as the music of the leaves touched by the soft zephyrs of the summer's night, seeking expression. As seen in retrospect, the lives of our departed friends were finished at the zenith of laudable ambition and without a blemish. Though dead in the physical sense, yet they speak out to us with powerful influence in conception of an existence beyond all earthly things. In contemplation of the days when they moved among us, beautiful, unpaintable pictures appear in the mind of how much sweeter life is that they lived. Winter's snows and springtime's flowers, summer's sunshine and autumn's decay, with its blending of gloom and brightness, may succeed each other over the physical resting place of these noble characters till the spot itself shall have been forgotten except to the passerby who may read it cut in stone; even the marble or the granite may fall into decay, yet the lives of these men, what they did, how they lived, what they were, will continue to teach valuable lessons, and their gentle spirits will continue to influentially reach out from the unseen beyond the impenetrable veil 'twixt the finite and the infinite to guard and to guide those in being and those who shall come after.

"Something has gone from nature since they died,
And life is not the same, nor can be."

Truly, rare and extravagant spirits come to us at intervals who disclose new facts of nature. Character and power, early and late, do not vary much. The inspiration of purpose and work very soon establish personality.

While we mourn the life of a friend, we may find comfort in the fact that of such men as these little is taken away by death. Their spirit and character live after them, and in the contemplation of their lives we feel the force and truth of Webster's words:

"How little there is of the great and good that can die. They live in all that perpetuates the remembrance of men on earth; in all the recorded proofs of their actions; in the offsprings of their intellects; and in the respect and homage of mankind. They live in their example; and they live and will live in the influence which their lives and their efforts, their principles and their opinions, exercise and will continue to exercise on the affairs of men."

When Dickens was bringing out his Old Curosity Shop, chapter by chapter, serially, the readers appealed to him: "Do not let Little Nell die; it is a life so beautiful"; but Dickens replied: "I have to let her die; I can't help it; she must die to complete the story and her life work."

Our departed brethren died rich in friends. In the hour of distress and misery the eye of every mortal turns to friendship. In the hour of gladness and convivially, what is our want? It is friendship. When the heart overflows with gratitude or with any other sweet and sacred sentiment, what is the word to which it would give utterance? A friend. King Solomon said: "He that hath friends must show himself friendly." This they did, splendidly and conspicuously, not only in deeds but in words.

You will excuse, even though you may expect it, that I should here sound a personal note. The warm, red blood of Ireland, flowing and commingling with the life currents of other people, has in all history produced men to stir with quickening speech; to thrill with ecstatic song; to die with superb daring; to live in truth for their loves and in faith for their friends, and, with it all, to wear a sun smile in their souls that carries warmth and cheer wherever it beams. And this was the blood from which Burton M. Despard sprung, and right eminently did he illustrate its noblest traits. He was not a man of expediency, substituting tact for courage, nor did his affection for his friends find its origin in dependence. It was the impulse rather of a heart as gentle as it was brave, as considerate as it was fearless and true. And his cordial manner and winning smile gained for him the confidence and esteem of all who knew him. It is not the length of man's friendship that gives it value, but rather the lifelong impression it makes and the good that comes of it. He lived the best of all lives—the life of service—the service that has that divine attribute of forgetfulness of self and thought of others. He was an humble and a consistent Christian. He lived much because he loved much. He loved the beautiful in nature and art; he loved the birds and trees and flowers; he loved his fellows:

I pray thee, then,
Write me as one who loves his fellow men—
The Angel wrote and vanished.
It came again with a great awakening light,
And showed the names whom love of God had blessed;
And lo! Ben Adhem's name led all the rest.

No truer tribute can be paid to his memory than is contained in these two words "death" and "duty":

Dead at his post of duty.
What finer eulogy—all the boast of pomp and glory seem but idle breath—
Beside the calm quiet dignity of death,
Where death and duty meet,
Is found solution most complete
Of all life's problems—'tis enough—
Dead at his post.

"Dave" Davidson, "Uncle Dave," as we affectionately called him, was one of my boyhood friends. He was a welcome guest at the wedding of my parents. To visit him at his store was always an event in my childhood days. I can see him now, so typical of Clarksburg and its life during that period. He moved and talked and lived and toiled as one of them. He was greatly loved by all who knew him. He was simple-hearted as a child, and his rugged, sturdy, kindly spirit shone in his face and his walk. He was a truly tender man. The fountain of tears and the fountain of laughter ran close together and carried his associates upon their mingled waters. He assimilated with this atmosphere and was a product of its then conditions. He possessed to a marked degree the qualities of the successful man. He had excellent common sense. He was decidedly and conspicuously practical. He saw things as they were in their true and real light. He believed in what was just. He loved what was right, and, like Burton Despard, he moved in straight lines from point to point. How the death of these men point the lines:

We know when moons shall wane,
When summer birds from far shall cross the sea,
When autumn's hue shall tinge the golden grain,
But who shall teach us when to look for thee—
O messenger of death!

The innate gentility of their natures, their unfailing courtesy, their unaffected kindness, and their consideration for the welfare and failings of others leave with those who knew them best the sweetest of recollections. They were born for a higher destiny than that of earth. They lived and died as gentlemen—the world's indispensable type of man. Their attitude toward life can be summed up in the lines:

Let me live in my house by the side of the road,
And be a friend to man.

Death is the most illogical and, therefore, unexplainable fact in life. Why the Grim Reaper should take men when they are just qualified to live and to be of value passes the comprehension of the finite mind. We wonder and we always shall ponder over this great mystery. I can never reconcile myself to the thought that a personality should be destroyed and annihilated when it has just rounded into maturity. Among all the nations of the earth—civilized and uncivilized—on continents and in the islands of the sea, the belief in immortality has been entertained. Nothing short of eternity could enable men to imagine, think, and feel, and then to express all that they have imagined, thought, and felt. Immortality is, therefore, not only the supreme yearning of the soul, but it is also an intellectual necessity; and nothing more powerfully argues of a life beyond the grave than these facts. If intellect and hope are to be stamped out by annihilation, then life is a hollow mockery and character a superb farce.

Death always leaves in its train the thought that he who was taken was fitted for higher achievements. To us who remain occasions such as this may well seem like admonition. To-day our brothers sleep. It is we who speak. To-morrow our lips may be silent and other voices speak as we are doing now. In the lottery of death there are no blanks. The dread moments are sure to come when the happiness of a lifetime melts away in one sad hour. Yesterday it was the child just unfolding into the beautiful mysteries of life; to-day it is the middle-aged just ready to reap a harvest of unrecalling toil; to-morrow it is the aged, full of years and honors, whose light, burned to the socket in a well-rounded life, goes out in darkness.

Yes; when the pale messenger lays his hand upon an accomplished life, a life that has rounded out the years which experience and inspiration assign as the desirable limit of human duration; when these years have been occupied with usefulness, rewarded by success, and crowned with love and gratitude; yes, when the good man, having discharged the duties and fulfilled the trusts of life, lies down calmly and peacefully to his final repose, we may grieve, but we are not permitted to complain. The tears of affection may not, indeed, be kept back, but the voice of reason is silenced. To complain at the close of such lives as our brothers lived is to complain that the ripened fruit drops from the overloaded bough, that the golden harvest waits for the sickle. To complain under such circumstances is to accuse the Creator because He did not make man immortal on the earth. True, their sunset has come, but let us hope—if we can not believe—that it was a sunrise that will never again set. We should have praise, honor, imitation, but no tears for such men as these. We should save our tears for those who have failed; for those who have fainted on the wayside; not those who have finished the journey without a spot on their escutcheon. The perplexing riddle of life will disturb us, I know, by the fact that everything is fragmentary and that nothing is permitted to reach perfection. Whether we shall see our friends face to face in that undiscovered country; whether we shall know them there as we know them here; whether body and soul separate here to be united again "over there"; whether that other life is a commingling of kindred spirits while the body returns to dust; whether it is all of life to live and all of death to die are problems we can not solve. But this we know, that in the death of our friends whose lives and services we commemorate to-day, earnest, active intellects, are stilled; that just as they hearkened to the call of duty God's finger touched them and they slept; beckoned them away from all the splendid, majestic beauties of life, from love and care and sorrow, to awake in eternity free from grief and pain. Such men need no praise. Their record is safe without panegyric.

Col. Whittlesey and His Command Were Never Lost But Added to the Luster of Our Arms.

OF
HON. ISAAC SIEGEL,
OF NEW YORK,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Monday, December 19, 1921.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, when the newspapers flashed the news around the world during the trying days of October 3 to October 8, 1918, that a part of the Seventy-seventh Division consisting of battalions of the Three hundred and eighth Infantry, together with parts of the Three hundred and seventh Infantry and Three hundred and sixth Machine Gun Battalion under the command of Maj. Whittlesey had held out for five days, although surrounded by a very large force of Germans, the American people applauded this heroic defense and there were no words too strong in the praises sung in behalf of these brave men. Some of the newspaper correspondents named the battalion "The lost battalion." The consequence was that wherever the survivors of this battalion turned they were reminded constantly that they had been lost. The truth of the matter was that they had advanced in accordance with orders to their objective point. The support which was expected to be given them to the right and the left failed. Thence came this wonderful heroic struggle to uphold the high traditions of our troops, and although the mortality rate was 50 per cent, they declined to surrender. These brave men wrote one of the most glorious pages in American history, yet there were some men who constantly and continuously misstated the facts regarding this incident.

The boys making up this battalion came from what is commonly known throughout the country as the lower and upper East Side of New York. Most of them were either immigrants or sons of immigrants. They demonstrated that which I said in 1916 when the immigration debate was on would be found to be true, namely, that when the time would come that the country really needed them that they would make the same sacrifices for the United States as the native born of generations back. The test came and in the critical hour they showed that I knew the mettle of which they were made.

Recently when the commander of this brave battalion, Col. C. S. Whittlesey, passed to the far beyond when he could no more withstand the sights of some of his men being unable to find employment, the failure on the part of certain administrative officials to take proper care of the men of this battalion, and the absolute neglect of employers to give these brave men a preference when seeking employment, some who had not dared to speak during the period of the war attempted to assert that this battalion had been lost. Even some of the newspapers commenced to express some doubts as to what had actually occurred. Accordingly, I felt the injustice to Col. Whittlesey and the brave men living and dead who were part of this famous battalion, and I therefore obtained the facts, so that the truth may for all time be known to future generations and to the historians who will write the story of America's great part in the World War.

The following letter written by Gen. John J. Pershing establishes beyond contradiction and controversy that this battalion was never lost.

It reads as follows:

GENERAL OF THE ARMIES,
Washington, December 15, 1921.

Hon. ISAAC SIEGEL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have your letter of December 13, making inquiries regarding the celebrated incident of Col. Whittlesey's command in the Meuse-Argonne Battle. I have seen neither of the articles you refer to as having appeared in the New York Tribune and the New York Evening Mail, and so I do not know how they present the matter.

In brief, Col. Whittlesey's command was not lost. After it had been isolated frequent attempts were made to furnish food and ammunition by means of airplanes. Unfortunately, it was very difficult for the aviators to locate in the dense forest the position of the battalion, which had been accurately indicated on the map. These relief supplies fell into the hands of the enemy. I mention this as evidence that the battalion was not lost in the sense that we did not know where it was. It was cut off.

Col. Whittlesey's command in making an advance penetrated more deeply into the enemy's position than did the adjacent battalions. Communication through the heavy underbrush in the forest was difficult, and before connection had been obtained with the units to his right and left rear the Germans filtrated through the gaps which then existed and eventually succeeded in surrounding the battalion.

I trust the foregoing is a satisfactory answer to your question. The official reports concerning the incident are on file in the archives of the War Department, and in due time will be assembled and accurately analyzed by the historical section of the General Staff.

With assurances of my regard,
Very sincerely, yours. JOHN J. PERSHING.

Maj. W. M. Blunt, assistant executive officer of the historical section of the Army War College, has furnished me with the following extract covering the incident in question of the report of the commanding general of the Seventy-seventh Division, Maj. Gen. Robert Alexander. It is as follows:

HEADQUARTERS SEVENTY-SEVENTH DIVISION,
December 15, 1918.

From: Commanding general Seventy-seventh Division.
To: The Adjutant General, A. E. (through military channels).
Subject: Report of operations, Forest D'Argonne.

8. The position referred to in the Bois de Naza and continuing across the ridge to the westward to the end of the trench system extending southward from the Bagatelle Pavilion, was encountered on the morning of October 1. On the right of the position referred to, improvised defenses had been constructed by the enemy consisting of slashed and wired underbrush and small trees covering the entire front of the position. This improvised organization extended beyond the right (eastern) flank of the divisional sector, the organization of the left extending eastward from the southern end of the Bagatelle trench system. This latter appeared to be trench system which had been begun but not entirely completed. This entire position was attacked, but very little progress was made during the day. During the 2d of October the attack being resumed at an early hour in the morning the position was penetrated on the left toward evening by the First Battalion of the Three hundred and eighth Infantry, together with elements of the Three hundred and seventh, under Capt. McMurty, and elements of the Three hundred and sixth Machine Gun Battalion. This detachment, under command of Maj. Charles S. Whittlesey, advanced as far as the position near the Bois de la Bulronne, on the La Viergette Road about 500 meters to east of the Moulin de Charlevaux. The troops on his right, however, were unable to penetrate the positions in their front. As soon as I learned of the position of Maj. Whittlesey's detachment I immediately ordered the battalion which was part of the Divisional Reserve held up till then in the vicinity of La Harazee, to proceed to the vicinity of the Deport de Machines; at the same time I notified the commanding general of the One hundred and fifty-fourth Brigade of my action in regard to the Divisional Reserve Battalion and directed him to use the battalion, which was his brigade reserve, for the purpose of covering the left flank of the troops in their advanced position. It appears that, owing to the darkness of the night, this battalion—formerly in the brigade reserve—did not reach the position where the function expected of it could be performed, and during the night the enemy forces penetrated the trenches south of the Bagatelle position, and linked up those trenches by wire entanglements with the position on the ridge west of the Bois de Naza in such a manner as to isolate the detachment commanded by Maj. Whittlesey, part.

9. On the morning of the 3d October the attack was renewed, the purpose being primarily to advance and, secondly, to reestablish communication with the advanced detachments, but owing to the difficulties of terrain, the inevitable absence of adequate artillery preparations and the thick character of the country, no appreciable progress was made during the day, either on the right or left. In this connection it may be stated that on neither flank of the division were there friendly troops within covering distance.

10. The French division on the left did not advance beyond the road running east and west through Binarville, and all that was to be found on the right were scattered parties of the Twenty-eighth Division. These scattered detachments had no connection with the main body of that division.

11. Five determined attacks were launched by the One hundred and fifty-fourth Brigade against the position in its front for the purpose of breaking through, carrying the line forward and reestablishing communication with Maj. Whittlesey's command, but without success. This lack of success was not due in any sense to incorrect direction of these attacks. It was brought about by the extreme difficulties of terrain, the lack of adequate artillery support due to the impossibility of observation of fire, and the close proximity of the opposite lines.

12. Meanwhile every effort was being made to advance along other portions of the divisional front, and finally, at about noon of the 7th, an opening was found between the position in the Bois de Naza and the position on the ridge west of that Bois. At this point, at the junction of ravines shown on map, it was found that the wire did not extend entirely across from one position to the other. By a process of infiltration and taking advantage of inequalities of the ground detachments from the left to the One hundred and fifty-third and the right of the One hundred and fifty-fourth Brigades finally reached positions from which reverse fire could be brought to bear on the hostile organization in front of our right and left, respectively.

13. I am informed that about the same time an attack was delivered on our right by a brigade of the Eighty-second Division in the direction of Cornay and Chatel Chenery, and it is probable that this attack assisted somewhat in relieving the situation in my front. However that may be, the evident thing to us was by the reverse fire brought from the detachments of the One hundred and fifty-third Brigade and One hundred and fifty-fourth Brigade, as indicated above, the opposition in our front was driven out and liaison reestablished with the detachment under Maj. Whittlesey about 9 p. m. on the night of the 7th of October.

14. Maj. Whittlesey's command had been cut off from the remainder of the division for a period of five days, during which time no communication had been had with them except by pigeon messages, copies of which are attached hereto as part of this report. The men of the command had carried into action with them two days' reserve rations, upon which they subsisted during the five days of their isolation. Too much credit can not be given Maj. Whittlesey, Capt. McMurty (since promoted to major), and the other officers and men of this detachment. On short rations, surrounded by enemies, continually under fire, having suffered losses of about 50 per cent, they still resisted and treated with contempt a demand for surrender made by the German commander on the morning of the 7th of October. Even though this division had accomplished nothing else during the course of this campaign, the exploit of Maj. Whittlesey and his detachment would be worth the highest honor. It exemplified the indomitable spirit which animates the division and which has enabled it throughout to triumph over its very serious obstacles which it has encountered.

15. After overcoming the hostile resistance along the general line of the Bois de Naza and Bagatelle position, the division continued its advance through the forest without encountering further abnormal resistance. The machine-gun resistance was to be found anywhere, as was to be expected, but organized positions were not further in evidence.

Mr. Speaker, I know that the American people have always been fair and in their hearts and souls desire to do justice to the brave men who responded to the Nation's call when their services were so urgently needed.

Let us hope that this incident will awaken in them the realization that we owe a debt of gratitude to all the gallant men who served us so well. We can show it best by taking care of those who were wounded and are now in the hospitals, many of them forgotten and neglected. In each vicinity will be found some of the boys of the various battalions and divisions, including the survivors of the "Lost Battalion."

Let us hope that willing hands will be stretched out to bring to those who are in our hospitals some of the little luxuries of life, including reading matter and athletic goods, and that the sacrifices made by the men of the "Lost Battalion" and other organizations will not have been in vain.

Let us give credit where it is due.

Let us sincerely be thankful that in our midst there were such men willing to face the enemy and decline to surrender, even though 50 per cent of their numbers had been mortally wounded or passed to the far beyond. They have taught us a lesson of real patriotism which time can never efface.

OF
HON. WILLIAM E. ANDREWS, OF NEBRASKA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, December 15, 1921,

On the bill (H. R. 8928) to provide for the classification of civil-service positions in the District of Columbia and in the field service.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, when we began the consideration of this bill a few days ago I fully intended to vote for its passage. The debate has disclosed some serious defects which ought to be corrected by this committee before it is recommended to the House. The central purpose of the bill is highly commendable, and when properly supported by wise, practical schedules and grades it ought to be incorporated into law.

Such legislation would assist very materially in avoiding gross abuses now existing in connection with lump-sum appropriations. It would also safeguard and promote the best interests of the people employed under the classified civil service.

It has been shown in the course of this debate that the bill in its present form would clothe the Civil Service Commission and Bureau of the Budget and the so-called Bureau of Efficiency with authority to veto the decisions of heads of departments and independent establishments with respect to the grades to which individual clerks may be assigned by those who are in direct contact with their daily duties. An intelligent classification or allocation, as some express it, of the clerks in the various departments can not be wisely made without an intimate knowledge on the part of the classifying officers as to the qualifications and merits of individual clerks. Without such knowledge the classification would be a mere matter of guess.

Who, aside from the head of the department and the chiefs of his bureaus, offices, and divisions, has any intimate knowledge of such qualifications? To gain that knowledge the Civil Service Commission, the Bureau of Budget, or the Bureau of Efficiency must place people in constant contact with the daily duties of all of these clerks, numbering 60,000 to 70,000, so that they may have an accurate knowledge that would warrant them in determining a classification. Before any of these outside agencies—the commission, the Bureau of the Budget, or the Bureau of Efficiency—can secure that knowledge, their own force must be placed in all of the Government departments, and that would mean duplication with a vengeance. As they do not now possess that knowledge, it is exceedingly unwise to give them any veto power in this question.

Moreover, such outside agencies should not be allowed, under any circumstances, to interfere with the conduct or orderly business now under the direction of the heads of the departments and independent establishments of the Government. If such heads are to be held responsible for results in administration and in efficiency of service, they must be given full authority to direct their own business. If they should find need of assistance from the Civil Service Commission, the Bureau of the Budget, or the Bureau of Efficiency, let them call for it and thus those outside agencies could render assistance under the supervision of the head of the department or independent establishment, and when the head of such department or independent establishment has no further use for the outside agency, it can be dismissed without friction or without misunderstanding.

This bill has been materially improved by striking out section 8. Section 9 and other provisions of the bill should also be stricken out. Such improvements would add materially to the value of the bill.

GRADES OF SCHEDULES.

The different grades proposed in the schedules of this bill are based, according to the committee in charge of the bill, upon the prewar salary plus the bonus of $240 as a basic salary. They also state that the salary proposed in the different grades would be equal to such basic salary plus 8.5 per cent of that amount. They further state that the minimum salary for clerk grades of entrance salary will be $1,080.

Without including the bonus of $240, a large number of clerks were receiving salaries of $1,000, $900, $840, and $720. Under the terms of the bill, it is proposed to advance all these lower grade clerks at least to the minimum salary, $1,080. This would require a very large increase of appropriations. It is claimed by some who have studied this question very closely that these provisions will require an increase of expenditures to the extent of eight or ten million dollars a year.

Under the terms of the bill a clerk may receive one promotion each year, thus making it possible to advance from the minimum salary of a particular grade to the maximum salary in a short period of time. Suppose we have a group of 25 clerks in a particular grade in a certain office. Take the minimum-salary grade at $2,000, the next $2,200, the next $2,400, and the next $2,600. At the end of the first year after the classification all those receiving the minimum salary would be eligible for advancement to the next higher salary of $2,200, likewise those at $2,200 might pass to $2,400, those at $2,400 would pass to $2,600. Thus in a very short period of time all the clerks of that grade might be advanced to the maximum salary allowed for that grade, or $2,600.

This provision would increase the appropriations annually very largely, and nobody could tell from year to year how much that increase would be. These conditions clearly show why this committee that submitted the bill is unable to tell us what the bill would cost. Would it not be wise to recommit the bill until the committee has had time to find out and fix rules by which we could tell what the annual expense would be? The members of the committee tell us that we ought to pass this measure as a scientific arrangement for classification. Well, perhaps it would be sufficient to say that the committee was lost in the midst of numerous and conflicting details, and that the only way in which they could extricate themselves is to call their classification scientific. This illustrates quite clearly the causes which bring the word "scientific" into use so frequently in the absence of real science. This occurs not only in business and departmental affairs, but also in educational and religious affairs. When people do not know what to call a certain method which nobody can understand, they say it is "scientific."

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I heartily favor a recommitment of this bill to the committee for the purpose of eliminating this extraneous matter and securing definite, reliable figures as to the actual cost of the bill. We can well afford to give more time to the committee for the solution of these problems. I would dislike very much to vote against the principle embodied in this bill, but how can we consistently vote for the bill with all of these superfluous, extraneous, and unwise provisions with which it is burdened?

Mr. Speaker, I heartily favor a recommitment of the bill to the committee in the hope that it may be put into such shape that we can afford to pass it.

The Filipinos' Answer to the Wood-Forbes Report.

OF
HON. JAIME C. DE VEYRA,
OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, January 5, 1922.

Mr. DE VEYRA. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me by the House, and on behalf of both my colleague, Mr. GABALDON, and myself, I include, first, a letter addressed by us as Resident Commissioners from the Philippines to the President of the United States, dated December 13, 1921; second, a speech by Sergio Osmeña, speaker of the Philippine House of Representatives, delivered before the delegates to the convention of the Nationalist Party held in Manila on December 3, 1921; and third, an extensive analysis by Prof. Maximo M. Kalaw, dean of the College of Liberal Arts, University of the Philippines, on the recent report submitted by the Wood-Forbes mission sent to the Philippines last summer by President Harding.

These papers deal directly on the report in question. The mission's report was given out to the public on November 30, 1921, by the War Department.

The Philippine question is of great interest to Americans and of vital importance to Filipinos, and I consider it my imperative duty to acquaint the Members of Congress and, through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the American people with the viewpoint of the Filipino people on the questions raised by the Wood-Forbes mission. The documents referred to are as follows:

LETTER TO PRESIDENT HARDING.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., December 13, 1921.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: You have recognized the Filipino protest against a report filed by Gen. Wood and ex-Gov. Forbes, who were appointed by you to investigate conditions in the Philippine Islands, and we appreciate assurances that opportunity will be given to meet what we deem to be hasty criticisms which it contains.

That report is being analyzed so that a correct statement may be set forth from the standpoint of the Filipino people.

At this time we briefly present for your consideration the great outstanding belief of our people in you because of your efforts to impart faith in international dealings by challenging selfish designs, exploitations of weaker people, and thereby giving to civilization a hope of lasting peace. The four-power treaty between the United States, Great Britain, France, and Japan guarantees the peace of the Pacific for 10 years, and with you, we hope, for all time to come. That treaty removes any vestige of fear of Japanese interference with the islands, never in fact considered a menace to the independence by the Filipino people, who intimately know conditions, but it has served as a convenient cloak to interests in the past that have urged a benevolent despotism in order to protect or exploit the islands. The partial sovereignty retained by the United States was stated by ex-President Roosevelt to be a military liability to your country, and it has been deemed none the less so to ours through its threat to involve us in international differences wherein we had no voice.

Following the expression of world-wide good will comprehensively laid down by you at the initial meeting of the disarmament conference Great Britain has negotiated a peace treaty with a portion of her own Government with which she has maintained the most intimate relations for many centuries, and she has now given to Ireland and the Irish people a separate free State with independent rights, marking a dawn of new freedom to subject peoples. England has surrendered control of an unwilling island within the shadows of her own coast without any past pledges or promises by recognizing the spirit of justice and good will to the world first inaugurated by the great Government of which you are the honored head and exponent.

In recognition of that same high purpose we pray that you give ear to the plea of over 10,500,000 people 7,000 miles distant from American shores, who look to you as the leader of high national ideals and who have implicit confidence in you and your Government and believe that an early performance of pledges repeatedly made to them will be kept. Your Government, with its glorious history of helping humanity and honest dealing among nations, set a high standard for subject people when a handful of pioneers, composing the weak, struggling Colonies nearly a century and a half ago, wrote in history a new page of hope. Inspired by that same spirit your people have repeatedly expressed deep sympathy with Irish aspirations for independence, even as Cuba was granted that which we crave immediately following peace made with Spain.

Compared with the stability of your Government at that time or conditions in Ireland, Cuba, and many organized and recognized Governments of the Old and New Hemispheres to-day, we invite comparisons with our own Philippine Islands based even on the few concessions made by the Wood-Forbes report, from which we quote:

Of the 10,500,000 Philippine inhabitants, 90 per cent of whom are Christians "over 1,020,000 are in school" (p. 17). "Public order is maintained principally by the constabulary, a force of 5,800 officers and men. This organization has proved itself to be dependable and thoroughly efficient" (p. 23). "They are naturally an orderly people" (p. 19). "The Philippine people possess many fine and attractive qualities—dignity and self-respect, as shown by deportment, complete absence of beggars, personal neatness and cleanliness, courtesy and consideration to strangers" (p. 16). The number of votes cast (by men) at the general election, 1919, was 672,122" (p. 6). "We find that the legislative chambers are conducted with dignity and decorum and are composed of representative men" (p. 45).

"Financially the income of the Philippine government in 1920 was $40,500,000 with tax per capita of $3.96" (p. 5) (or about 10 per cent of the per capita tax paid by the American people). "Resources of commercial banks, 1920, $215,000,000" (p. 25). "Postal savings, 1920, 107,000 depositors and $1,612,500 deposits" (p. 33). "Trade with the United States, 1920, $197,506,041" (p. 5).

"The supreme court (of which four of the members, including the chief justice, are Filipinos) has the respect and confidence of the Philippine people" (p. 24).

What small government with the same handicaps, we submit, can offer better evidence of stable government represented by a report which we deem is not well considered in many respects. For illustration affecting the last statement, criticism is heaped on our inferior courts and an unstable government inferred in the report because in hundreds of different courts of the islands, including the supreme, municipal, and justice, the report alleges 50,000 cases are pending on the different court dockets. If true in fact, we regret this congestion in the judicial branch of our government, but we submit that by the same standard the United States Government might be found unstable, because 8 Federal district courts out of more than 100 in this country reported 63,344 cases pending on their dockets, according to statistics offered in Congress last week.

Bearing in mind the unexcelled record for peace, order, and law-abiding citizenship existing in the islands, which is admitted in the Wood-Forbes report and without any purpose of criticizing conditions elsewhere, we frankly say that stories of lynchings, holdups, armed mail trains and orders of shoot to kill, bank robberies, and crimes generally related in the daily press here, would shock and confound the frequently exploited "head hunters" and "warring" Filipinos who long ago joined their peaceful neighbors and are now law-abiding citizens of the Islands. They help till the 1,946,579 small farms now owned by Filipinos as reported in the last census.

Reading from the report Messrs. Wood and Forbes say: "We find the people are happy, peaceful, and in the main prosperous" (p. 45); again "we find everywhere among the Christian Filipinos (90 per cent of the population) the desire for independence" (p. 45) "the pagans and non-Christians, constituting about 10 per cent of the population, are for continued American control" (p. 21). "The Americans in the islands, numbering 6,931 out of 10,956,730 total population, or far less than one-tenth of 1 per cent, are for a continued American control" (p. 21). That is a situation conceded by a critical report of island conditions.

In your capacity of a world leader fearlessly engaged in arousing humanity's conscience heretofore subservient to force, power, and selfish ambitions, we further briefly submit to your attention pledges and guaranties that have come to us from your predecessors in office without political bias or partisanship.

President McKinley (1899), "the Philippines are ours not to exploit but to develop, to civilize, to educate, to train in the science of self-government." Again he says, "We must make these people whom Providence has brought within our jurisdiction feel that it is their liberty and not our power, their welfare and not our gain, we are seeking to enhance."

Gov. Taft (1907), "Our jurisdiction and control will finally end in the islands when they are capable of self-government." Ex-President Roosevelt (1915), "If we act so that the natives understand us to have made a definite promise, then we should live up to that promise. * * * These being the circumstances the islands should at an early moment be given their independence without any guaranty whatever by us and without our retaining any foothold in them."

The Jones existing law: "It is and always has been the purpose of the people of the United States to withdraw their sovereignty over the Philippine Islands and to recognize their independence as soon as a stable government can be established therein." President Wilson (1920): "I respectfully submit that this condition precedent (stable government) having been fulfilled, it is now our liberty and our duty to keep our promise to the people of those islands by granting them the independence which they so honorably covet."

Ex-Presidents McKinley, Taft, Roosevelt, Wilson—four of your illustrious predecessors—at different times have reminded the Filipinos and the world that the promises made to them are promises made to be kept. The American Congress has voiced that same pledge for the American people in the Jones Act. May we not in this day of noble aspirations and accomplishments among nations led by the United States now look to you as representative of that people to urge fulfillment of the pledge to grant Philippine independence even as a mother country over a century and a quarter ago yielded to a small but sovereign people that which in recent days has made your Government the greatest power for good on earth?

We will submit as soon as possible views promised on the Wood-Forbes report in order to present a further record of the achievements and high standards of citizenship reached by the people of the Philippines. Herein we have sought to place before you briefly these accomplishments as evidenced by a hasty report, and above all we have endeavored to set forth the solemn guaranties heretofore given to our people so that at this momentous time, when the world is moved by great moral uplift toward high ideals and unexampled spirit of international brotherhood, we may hope for early fulfillment of national pledges given by the United States to the Filipino people.

Very respectfully,

JAIME C. DE VEYRA,
ISAURO GABALDON,
Resident Commissioners, Philippine Islands.

VIEWS OF SPEAKER OSMEÑA, OF THE PHILIPPINE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

I will next offer the views of Sergio Osmeña, speaker of the Philippine House of Representatives. His conclusions of the now famous Wood-Forbes report are contained in a speech delivered by him to the delegates attending the Nacionalista Party convention in Manila, P. I., December 3, 1921:

"These are special circumstances which demand the exercise of tact, ability, and perspicacity, so that we may be able to solve the big problems which confront us and which require big measures also," he said in beginning his speech. "In circumstances like this we should be calm, we should keep our poise and reflect carefully. The cooler we are, the better we shall be prepared to fight.

"The Nacionalista Party has been born in the midst of trying circumstances. It came into life poor, and it is but natural that at these moments it should continue to suffer, comforted only by the confidence placed in it by the people. We have a big task ahead of us, we are shouldering heavy responsibilities, and it is our duty to remain faithful to the people.

"What is the principal question now, the main issue? The question is whether we have fulfilled the conditions imposed upon us by Congress as a prerequisite to the granting of our independence, whether we have responded to the wishes not only of the people but also of Congress. In other words, the question is whether or not we have established here a stable and orderly government.

"Our struggle, therefore, is not only for independence, but for our fundamental rights. Our nationalism of to-day is the same as it was before. We have more than fulfilled the established conditions. We have now in the islands an orderly, free, and stable government. It is now up to Congress to fulfill its pledge of 1916 honorably. Our government has not been established overnight. It is merely a continuation of the government founded here the day following the withdrawal of Spanish sovereignty from the islands, a government improved gradually upon the old one.

"In asking for the establishment of a stable government here Congress did not mean, I am sure, that we should really have a stable government because such a government has been in existence here since American occupation of the islands, but to improve on the old one, to extend the powers already conferred upon the Filipinos.

"We have followed to the letter the wishes of Congress in this respect. Our bureau system remains the same as it was before 1916. The only difference is that while formerly the administration did not have any direct dealings with the people, the commissioners remaining isolated from them and the bureaus constituting independent branches of the government, now we have what we call departmental responsibility, the bureaus and departments can at any time be summoned before the legislature. The department secretaries are now chosen after every general election so that the influence of the masses may reach the high spheres of government.

"The present government has been brought about without making any marked changes in the old government. While we openly give ex-Gov. Forbes credit for his road construction initiative, it was the Philippine Assembly to which he appealed in 1907 for funds which established a fixed public works policy. Before 1907 there was no such policy. Funds were not regularly appropriated for public works, except for a few roads like that of Baguio. When 1916 came, we not only maintained but improved and extended the public works system of the islands. There is no town or Province here but has been benefited by this improvement.

"As to schools, you know full well how our people are anxious for an education and how the parents of the children are compelling their little ones to go to school. The progress of the public-school system in the islands began in 1907 when the Philippine Assembly was first established and the Nacionalistas received an overwhelming majority at the polls. Without need of imposing any new taxes upon the people, we have made a big sacrifice by setting aside ₱30,000,000 from the insular funds for public schools only.

"The administration of justice in the islands now is as good as it was in the past. It is not true that the administration of justice has been neglected. Philippine judges are admitted to be competent. Even ex-President Taft recognized this fact and declared that they would be the pride of any bench in the world, even America herself. Formerly the judges were appointed at the pleasure of the Philippine Commission and could be summoned to hear, try, and decide certain special cases. Naturally, such a practice aroused the suspicion of the public. Now no judge can be removed, even by the Governor General of the islands. Those who denounce the administration of justice in the islands must appeal to the corresponding authorities and must be prepared to produce facts for the removal of any judges. Otherwise, they alone should be held responsible for the consequences of their act.

"With regard to public order, you know better than I do that the Filipino by nature is peaceful and orderly. He is not headstrong or rebellious. On the contrary, he is submissive and ready to obey the law. During the war not only did we exercise self-control but also offered to send abroad a division of our National Guard. Former Gov. Gen. Harrison, despite the defects he might have had, was the only governor general we have had who could say that the Philippines was orderly and that there was no need of sending additional troops from the United States to the Islands. The peace we had in the days during the war is the best proof of the stability of our government here.

"Nor are these alone our achievements in the past few years. We have improved our central government as well as our Provinces. Formerly there was a confusion over the classes of Provinces. Such is not the case now. The Nacionalista Party therefore has been able to establish an efficient and stable government, not because of its own efforts alone but with the aid and cooperation of the people.

"It goes without saying that the work of the Nacionalista Party is to secure independence. We may have a domestic platform, but independence will remain the principal issue, the fundamental problem. We should not feel relieved of our responsibility until we have attained independence. Nothing short of independence should satisfy us. After we have reached our goal it matters little if this party is dissolved. You may then seek other paths, form other groups.

"We have sent a message to President Harding in an endeavor to obtain a hearing. We have been judged and it is but logical that we through our representatives should be heard. I am confident that President Harding will give us the hearing we seek."

SPEAKER OSMEÑA'S GENERAL CONCLUSIONS.

The Manila Times of December 4 itemized the general conclusions of Speaker Osmeña as follows:

1. Anybody attacking our courts must appeal to the proper authorities and produce facts for the removal of incompetent and dishonest judges, and should he fail to substantiate his charges he alone must be held responsible for the consequences on his act.

2. While due credit must be given to former Gov. Gen. Forbes for his initiative in establishing a fixed policy for road construction, it was the old Philippine Assembly which gave him the means to carry it out.

3. We have extended our school system to the point of appropriating ₱30,000,000 exclusively for public schools without need of imposing any new taxes upon the people.

4. Public order in the islands is such that even during the war, the most crucial moment for the United States, no disorder of any kind was registered here, and consequently there was no need of sending additional forces of the Army or Navy to the Philippines.

THE WOOD-FORBES REPORT—A CRITICAL ANALYSIS BY PROF. MAXIMO M. KALAW, DEAN OF THE COLLEGE OF LIBERAL ARTS, UNIVERSITY OF THE PHILIPPINES.

The acceptance by President Harding and the American Congress of the conclusions and recommendations of the special mission would mean, in the first place, an indefinite postponement of Philippine independence. To quote former Vice Gov. Yeater, the report of the mission would place the Philippine question "on the table." Analyzed more closely, the report spells a backward policy for the Philippines. It points out, however, in a graphic form some of the grave mistakes that have been committed during the last eight years. This is possibly its greatest merit. It presents to our eyes the possibilities of the improvements that can be made. It does justice to some very salient and notable characteristics of the Filipino people, but its compliments are always followed by "buts" which go far deeper to prove the present incapacity of the Filipino people to support by themselves any decent constitutional government.

PRESIDENT HARDING'S REASONS FOR SENDING THE MISSION.

What was the reason for sending the special mission to the Philippines? President Harding frankly stated that the basis for the sending of the mission is the message of President Wilson to Congress on December 7, 1920, which he quoted in his letter of instructions to the mission as follows:

"Allow me to call your attention to the fact that the people of the Philippine Islands have succeeded in maintaining a stable government since the last action of the Congress in their behalf, and have thus fulfilled the condition set by the Congress as precedent to a consideration of granting independence to the islands. I respectfully submit that this condition precedent having been fulfilled, it is now our liberty and our duty to keep our promise to the people of those islands by granting them the independence which they so honorably covet."

President Harding further admitted that the above message was based on the report of the highest authority of the Philippines, meaning Gov. Gen. Harrison.

In appointing the special mission, President Harding made it known that he wanted to find out whether the recommendation and report of President Wilson and Gov. Gen. Harrison were true to the fact or not. He stated that while President Wilson and Gov. Gen. Harrison had already certified that the Filipino people had fulfilled the requirements of stable government in the Philippines, there were other people who did not believe so, and hence the sending of the Wood-Forbes Mission.

THE STANDARD OF A "STABLE GOVERNMENT" AS SET FORTH BY THE JONES LAW.

If the purpose of the mission was to verify the report of the previous administration, it is only fair, nay, necessary, that we know the criterion or standard on which that report was based.

When President Wilson and Gov. Gen. Harrison officially certified that there was a stable government in the Philippines, they did not mean a perfect government, or a government on a par with an oligarchy in so far as efficiency is concerned, or even a government approaching the perfection of the six foremost democracies in the world, which have been described by Mr. Bryce in his recent book. President Wilson and Gov. Gen. Harrison simply meant a standard required both by the general practices of international law and by the United States whenever the phrase "stable government" is used. It must be remembered that the possession of a stable government is one of the conditions required by the League of Nations before new States can be admitted to it, and in this connection, Austria, Bulgaria, Costa Rica, and Finland have been adjudged possessors of "stable governments." In other words, a stable government has been interpreted by the learned internationalists of the assembly of the League of Nations as a de facto government which has the support of the people. America's interpretation in the past is not far from that interpretation, as is shown when President McKinley urged Congress to declare war with Spain to liberate Cuba. He definitely stated that as soon as the Cuban people had established in the island "a stable government, capable of maintaining order and observing its international obligations, insuring peace and tranquillity and the security of its citizens as well as our own," Cuban independence would be recognized.

In passing the Jones law, the American Congress simply adopted the American policy for the recognition of Cuban independence and provided that "as soon as a stable government can be established in the Philippines, Philippine independence would be recognized." When Gov. Harrison appeared before the congressional committee in 1919, he said:

"I wish to state upon my responsibility as the Governor General that, in my opinion, there exists to-day in the Philippine Islands a stable government, which I think should answer the requirements laid down by Presidents Grant and McKinley, and, as I understand it also, by Mr. Root, namely, a government elected by the suffrages of the people, which is supported by the people, which is capable of maintaining order and of fulfilling its international obligations."

In his official report to the Secretary of War he confirmed this statement. It was the basis of President Wilson's message to Congress quoted by President Harding.

President Wilson and Gov. Gen. Harrison applied, therefore, the standard set down by the Jones law and followed by the United States and the League of Nations.

A DIFFERENT STANDARD SET FORTH BY SECRETARY WEEKS.

While President Harding's desire seems to be to prove or disprove President Wilson's and Gov. Gen. Harrison's statement, the instructions of Secretary of War Weeks to the special mission were somewhat different. He did not take the Jones law preamble as the criterion for the work of the mission, although the preamble of the Jones law is the statement of policy that was ever voted upon and approved by the only legal and constitutional body that can announce any policy at all binding upon the American people—the Congress of the United States. Secretary of War Weeks in his letter of instruction rather considered the instructions of Mr. McKinley in 1900 as the standard. Now, the instructions of President McKinley apparently sound well, but when one analyzes it more closely and more intensely he will find that it is less liberal than the Jones law. In fact, it may never mean independence. The Philippine Commission was authorized to establish a government conformable, it is true, to our customs, habits, and even to our prejudices, but only to the extent consistent with the accomplishment of the "indispensable requisites of a just and effective government." Apply a similar criterion to the question of Philippine independence and you have this inevitable formula: If in the opinion of the United States Philippine independence will not be for our happiness, peace, or prosperity, whether we like it or not, whether it has been promised us or not, whether we have fulfilled the condition or not, it will not be given us.

It is true that in other portions of the instructions Secretary Weeks firmly states that the determination as to whether the present government of the Philippines has contributed to the happiness, peace, and prosperity of the Filipino people "must necessarily depend largely on the views of that people." It is also true that there is another apparently splendid provision requesting the mission not to use the standard of other countries and other climates and particularly the American idea of perfection in governmental matters. But the last paragraphs neutralize the intent of the foregoing admonitions. Secretary Weeks predisposed the mind of the mission in favor of indefinite retention when he said:

"The pleasing of the Filipinos of this generation would be a minor satisfaction if it were believed that it would result in the bondage or destruction of the Filipino people for all time hereafter.

"Whether the result of your investigation may or may not be to the satisfaction of the majority of the Filipino people at this time, I am convinced that, undertaken in the spirit in which it is committed to you and in which you have undertaken it, it can not but be to the future satisfaction of the Filipinos and must, of necessity, result in their permanent well-being and progress."

Now, the foregoing pronouncement is clearly in conflict with the spirit and letter of the Jones law. It is in conflict with President Harding's own attitude, who has often assured the Resident Commissioners that he stands by the Jones law. It is tantamount to saying to the Filipinos of to-day: "You might as well quit all agitation for independence now. I will give it to you whenever it pleases me to do so."

We have thought that with the enactment of the Jones law an entirely different stage has been reached in the discussion of the Philippine problem. The Jones law contains a definite pledge voted and approved by the Congress of the United States and signed by the President to the effect that when the conditions of a stable government have been fulfilled the recognition of independence would be in order. That pledge was accepted by the Filipino people in good faith. The Jones law became, in the words of its author, a "covenant between the American and the Filipino peoples."

Why should another criterion be now injected, saying that it does not matter whether the present generation of Filipinos is pleased or not?

THE STANDARD OF 1913 FOLLOWED BY THE MISSION.

The Wood-Forbes mission thus started its work with the apparently arbitrary standard set down by Secretary Weeks, which would eliminate from consideration the desires of the present generation of Filipinos.

It did not accept the standard of a stable government as defined by the League of Nations, by the United States in the past, and by Gov. Gen. Harrison. In fact, no mention whatever is made in the report of the promise of independence contained in the preamble of the Jones law. It seems that the chairman of the mission had a different interpretation as to the term "stable government." At the meeting held by the Philippine Columbian Association he was reported to have defined "stable government" in the following words:

"A stable government means civic courage, courts of justice which give equal opportunities to the senator as well as to the simple 'tao,' resources ready for disposal at any moment they are needed by the country, organization which will enable the country to defend its integrity, adequate hospitals all over the islands which are not found in the provinces we have just visited, social organization which shows keen human interest in the protection of the needy and the poor, effective public sanitation, common language, and many others."

Now, the foregoing was not the accepted definition of "stable government," as is seen in the definitions which we quoted above. It is true, however, that in judging the Philippine situation the mission was asked by Secretary of War Weeks to apply this apparently benignant rule:

"In passing on questions thus presented it is necessary to avoid comparison with a standard of other countries and other climates and particularly with our own idea of perfection."

But, again, does the foregoing suggestion when treated separately result in a fair standard? In the first place the Philippines is the first attempt on a large scale at representative government in the Tropics. So there can be no tropical standard. Then what is the standard left? Only one; the standard of the previous administration of which Gov. Forbes, one of the members of the mission, was the head! And the Wood-Forbes mission made it its standard! It said:

"The general administration of the Philippine Government in 1913, the period of greatest efficiency, was honest, highly efficient, and set a high standard of energy and morality."

Now, unfortunately, Gov. Gen. Wood was not in the Philippines in 1913, so he could not have known the standard then. How could he, therefore, compare the 1913 standard with the present government when he was not here? So the only arbiter in judging the situation and comparing it with a definite standard was Gov. Gen. Forbes. Here was a strange anomaly unheard of in the annals of the United States, where an interested party, head of a previous administration, was made the judge as to the success or failure of his rival and successor! But even granting for the sake of argument that the Wood-Forbes mission, despite Gov. Forbes's participation, acted judiciously and fairly in comparing the administration of 1913 with that of the eight years of Philippine autonomy, we maintain that Philippine autonomy would still be at a disadvantage as regards the efficiency of the government. An oligarchic government, with no popular favor to cater or local constituencies to please, is likely to have a more efficient administration than a government controlled by the representatives of the people. This is a well-known axiom in politics. Thus Bryce says in his "Modern Democracies":

"There are points in which a democratic government suffers by comparison with an oligarchic, for the latter is more likely to recognize the importance of skill in administration and of economy in the management of finance, since it is not tempted to spend money in satisfying the importunities of localities or of sections of the population."

THE GOOD POINTS IN THE REPORT.

We will not go at this time into details of the report with regard to the different Government activities. The heads of the different bureaus and other people conversant in the different cases may come out in their support or defense. The foregoing statement of the different standards used, I believe, will be sufficient for a conclusion that the Wood-Forbes report is based on unwarranted premises. It has evaded the issue of stable government and would inject a new criterion in the discussion of the Philippine problem. This is in no way a criticism of the individual members of the mission, for it seems that they have followed only the instruction. The chairman of the mission has always been considered by the people as a fair-minded, square man.

There are many good points in the report. For a Republican report it is a tremendous step toward a better appreciation of the good qualities of the Filipino people. Compared to the reports of the early days of American occupation one will see that it has apparently a more sympathetic view of the Filipino people. One entire chapter is devoted to a description of the people. Examined closely, however, many of the paragraphs which begin with apparently complimentary sentences invariably end with qualifications and criticisms which neutralize all the fine things that have been said in the first part. The Filipino people, we are told, are not lacking in capacity; that they are orderly and law-abiding; but "their government is not reasonably free from those underlying causes which result in the destruction of government." Viewed separately in connection with the purely local problems, the graphic picture that it has made of our shortcomings and deficiencies should be welcome. Surveys are necessary so that we may view what we have done and correct the deficiencies that we have made. The lack of sufficient press which will insure a sound public opinion; the mistakes that have been made in the finances; the delay in the administration of justice; the need of good teachers both in the schools and in the higher institutions of learning, the inadequate treatment and care of dependent peoples; the defects of the election law—all these are more or less recognized by the majority of the people, and measures are already afoot for their correction.

WHAT IF THE WILSON-M'KINLEY STANDARD HAD BEEN USED.

The reader may believe that the writer has already dwelt too extensively on the different standards used in gauging the Philippine question; but in the estimate of any social condition is not the standard a deciding factor? The Spanish verse, "Todo es segun el color del cristal con que se mira," is appropriate to the present case.

Let us suppose that the mission had used the Wilson-McKinley standard in the survey of Philippine conditions. Critical as the survey has been, I believe that the conditions exposed in the report would compare favorably with the existing conditions of four countries admitted to the League of Nations, because, among other things, they possess stable government—Austria, Bulgaria, Costa Rica, and Finland. There are apparently in President McKinley's estimate two main elements in a stable government: First, ability to maintain order and insure peace and tranquillity and the security of citizens; second, ability to observe its international obligations. To these two elements Mr. Root, in his instructions for the Cuban people, also added the following: It must rest upon the peaceful suffrages of the people and must contain constitutional limitations to protect the people from the arbitrary actions of the Government. These four elements will be found in the facts gathered by the mission. It is admitted by the mission that order has been in excellent condition and that our constabulary is sufficient to maintain internal peace. The tranquility and security of the citizens are not jeopardized. As to the obligations for international life, the Wood-Forbes mission recognizes that there are people in our service who could do credit to any Government; that our legislature is filled with representative men. Without desiring to enter into invidious comparisons, the Filipinos have an advantage over any oriental country in so far as ability to maintain international relations is concerned, for the simple reason that we are the most western of all oriental peoples and our laws are not taken from oriental sources. Even to-day foreigners in the Philippines are being judged in the courts by Filipino judges, so that there will not be any need of extraterritorial courts. International obligations will naturally mean sound finances, and it is here that we must confess that the Filipino people have made the greatest blunders, but the financial situation of the Philippines is not as bad as that of other countries where moratoriums have had to be declared. In fact, the Wood-Forbes mission itself states that we have comparatively more simple financial problems here and that our economic ailings can soon be healed. On page 39, for instance, it says:

"In view of the good earnings, moderate expenses, inherent wealth, a small public debt, and backed by the credit of the United States, the problem of rehabilitating the credit of the Philippine Islands should be an easy one. The lesson has been a bitter one for the Filipinos and the gravity of the mistake is generally appreciated."

Stable government has never meant ability to repel an outside attack, for, indeed, how many nations will be independent to-day if this is a criterion for independence? France, one of the great nations, was found unable by herself to repel a German attack.

Even the statement of the mission that "the Government is not reasonably free from those underlying causes which result in a destruction of government" can be applied to all the new nations of Europe and even to some old ones. Our country has been accustomed to constitutional restrictions. They are one of the greatest benefits that has been given us by America. Such constitutional limitations have been since 1900 the fundamental law of the land. It may be said that they are already embedded in the legal and political life of the people. No matter what political changes may occur, they will hardly find any material alteration.

DISREGARD OF OUR REPRESENTATIVE INSTITUTIONS.

In its report, as well as in its travels in the Philippines, the mission has, perhaps involuntarily, shown a tendency to disregard or belittle the attitude and work of the Government, especially of our legislature. Many people came to look upon the mission as an administrative court of last resort to hear and decide complaints of all kinds against the existing Government. This practice was certainly destructive of the principle of representative government, for instead of fostering the idea that the people themselves through the voters must correct the administrative abuses of those in power they were led to believe that they can look somewhere else for the remedies they desire. It is fortunate that the chairman of the mission became the Governor General, for as Governor General he will be in duty bound to require the support of the people for the Government. He will thus be able to erase the bad impression unconsciously made.

It is noticeable how the entire report fails to mention, even incidentally, the official attitudes and representations that the Philippine Legislature has taken on the general independence question. Yet the Wood-Forbes mission certifies in its conclusion "that the legislative chambers are composed of representative men."

Now, if it is the desire to create and strengthen representative government in the Philippines, the people must be taught to respect and acquiesce in the decisions legally and officially rendered on their behalf by their representatives. This must be done unless the American people desire to establish direct legislation by the people themselves. But if in the opinion of the mission the people have not yet absorbed their present powers, it would seem absurd to advocate a more advanced step toward democracy such as the initiative and the referendum. Perhaps this attitude of belittling or ignoring the legislature was unconsciously made by the Wood-Forbes mission as a reflection of the attitude of distrust with which the legislature is held in many States of the Union to-day. But the Philippine Islands is not yet ready by any means to take this attitude; so that we must, on the contrary, try to foster the idea of representative government by urging the people to elect their best men as representatives, and then to follow the decision of such representatives in the government, subject, naturally, to their recall at the following elections.

The mission has completely ignored the legislature. Perhaps the members of the mission did not realize that the Philippine Legislature, representing the Filipino people, has taken official attitudes on the independence question. The Philippine Legislature has ratified in a joint resolution signed by the Governor General, the establishment of a commission of independence for the purpose of discussing with the United States the ways and means for the recognition of independence. The independence commission is, therefore, a legal body clothed with powers to deal on the indpendence question. It was this commission of independence which sent a special mission to the United States, which was officially received by the Secretary of War on behalf of the President of the United States. Now, it would seem to the ordinary observer that the special Wood-Forbes mission could not ignore the legal personality of the commission of independence or the legislature, especially when the work of the mission was to deal with independence problems and the relations between the United States and the Philippines. Upon the arrival of the mission the commission of independence sent a statement welcoming the mission to the Philippines and offering its services. One would believe that most of the dealings of this Wood-Forbes mission would be with this body, especially in matters pertaining to the relations between the United States and the Philippines. But the Wood-Forbes mission—obeying, perhaps, instructions—treated the commission of independence like anybody else. Nay, it has not even a mention of any resolutions of the legislature in the body of the report. No. 12 of the list of exhibits is listed as a "declaration of senators and representatives requesting independence." Now, this was undoubtedly the declaration of the commission of independence in an official capacity, yet it was listed simply as a declaration of individual senators and representatives! It is placed on the list of exhibits and not even on the list of appendices. It apparently has the same weight with the mission as the "letters from prominent Americans of long residence in the Philippines" and "petitions from Americans of Mindanao." It is perhaps in the same category as the author's own book, "The Present Government of the Philippines," which was honored with a place on the list of exhibits. It would seem to me that a body clothed by law with powers and therefore authorized by the people to speak in their behalf would deserve better treatment than that.

We do not in the least mean to question the fairness of the men composing the mission, but we only will say that they are human beings, and, in the case of ex-Gov. Forbes, it would practically be impossible for him to do away with the personal equation. What we desire to impress is that if the United States means to establish and has established in the Philippines the principle of representative government by means of an elective legislature composed of the senate and the house of representatives, it is only proper that we give this body all the consideration and the authority which a representative organ should have. If a representative organ is supposed to speak for the people through legal channels, it would seem to us that next to the people themselves directly it is the greatest authority on what the people want; so that, no matter how extended has been its trip, no matter how thorough has been its investigation, it would still be illogical and contrary to the principles of democracy to take the word of the mission, in so far as the desires and aspirations of the people are concerned, rather than the word of the duly elected representatives of the people. The mission, for instance, in its heading on the present condition, has stated the following:

"The great bulk of the Christian Filipinos have a very natural desire for independence; most of them desire independence under the protection of the United States; a very small percentage desire immediate independence with separation from the United States; a very substantial element is opposed to independence, especially at this time. The Moros are a unit against independence and are united for continuance of American control * * *."

Now, we admit that the representatives of the Moros in the legislature are not designated by election, but by appointment, and perhaps in that case a direct survey will prove of some help. But Gov. Gen. Wood, with only two exceptions, has reappointed the representatives of the non-Christian Provinces, apparently believing them to be representative men.

Senator Hadji Butu was reappointed, who was present when the legislature made known its "declaration of purposes." But in all the Christian parts we submit that the safest barometer, if we are to exercise self-government here, the people's representatives—the Filipino people have been electing representatives for the last 13 years and the issue in all elections has always been independence. If the statements of the legislature are still being questioned by the American authorities, the only way left for a more faithful reflection of the people's desire is a nation-wide plebiscite.

REPORT WOULD HINDER DEVELOPMENT OF TWO STRONG PARTIES.

The Herald (Manila) has rightly observed that while the American Government presents the spectacle of a sovereign power willing to exercise all important powers of government possible, taking away even those which have already been granted to the people or their representatives, we can never develop in the Philippines a strong two-party system, for the Filipino people must always feel the necessity of having a united front. What nations engaged in an international conflict or discussion desire to have a strong party government instead of a coalition government? During the Great War all the Governments of Europe were coalition Governments. President Wilson tried to manage his Government during the war on the old system, and he failed. So, while the great issue of self-government and independence exists, it is doubtful whether the great Nacionalista Party will be foolish enough to split itself into liberal and conservative factions. It must always feel the necessity of preserving unity. Has anybody noticed how soon the clouds of animosity between the different Nacionalista factions have disappeared as soon as the report of the mission was known? How placid are the waters of the Nacionalista convention!

TWO THINGS THAT ARE AN IMPROVEMENT OVER 1913.

The report is firm in its conviction that, compared with 1913, the present Government has gone down in efficiency and usefulness. We are prepared to say that the present Government has made two fundamental improvements over that of 1913. One of them is the reorganization of the executive departments, some portion of which—especially those which took away bureaus from the supervision of American heads—the mission seems to take exception to. On the main object and result of the reorganization act, the mission was silent, when, as a matter of fact, the law placed the Government on a secure foundation of efficiency—a much greater efficiency than the 1913 in so far as organization and proper coordination of the bureaus and activities are concerned.

There were several reasons why the reorganization was made.

In the first place, the Jones law authorizes such reorganization, and it was necessary to ratify in the statute books of the Philippines the new executive power granted the Filipinos to make the departmental secretaries partly responsible to the legislature. In the second place, it was urgent that there be a more logical and scientific regrouping of bureaus and offices. This need had long been felt, even before the passage of the Jones law, and for that purpose the emergency board provided in the appropriation law of 1915 was authorized to act as an efficiency board to investigate and analyze as minutely as possible the organization of the bureaus of the insular government for the purpose of determining the utility of each of them, the possibility of their improvement by eliminating all duplication work * * * and in general indicating such changes in the direction and organization of the bureaus as will tend to simplify the system of work followed and result in economy and increased efficiency." In the third place, it was necessary to provide for a harmonious action and cooperation between the executive heads and the legislature. And in the fourth place, it was felt that the new department heads should have more authority and power over the offices and bureaus under them.

Acts 222 and 1407 of the Philippine Commission, which were responsible for the organization of the executive departments up to 1916, left a great deal to be desired in the way of logical and scientific arrangement of bureaus. The departments, as created by the first act, were denominated the department of the interior, department of commerce and police, department of finance and justice, and department of public instruction. The mere mention of the names given to these departments," said Senator Palma, "shows that organization to be theoretically defective. No country in the civilized world has organized a department of commerce and police, because commerce and police involve completely contrary and antagonistic ideas. The commerce is essentially pacific, while the police is essentially warlike."

Act No. 1407 reorganized the departments and bureaus and offices of the government, abolishing certain bureaus and offices and creating others in their stead. This organization was not better than the previous one, because under it bureaus whose activities were very dissimilar were kept in the same department. In the department of the interior the bureau of health remained side by side with that of lands and the bureau of agriculture with that of quarantine service. In the department of commerce and police the constabulary continued side by side with the bureau of public works and the bureau of posts, together with that of port works. The department of finance and justice still performed its legal functions at the same time as the work of collecting customs dues and internal-revenue taxes. The department of public instruction continued to solve educational problems and have charge at the same time of the bureaus of supply and printing, a rare combination, indeed.

Heretofore each bureau was almost a department by itself. It used to send its estimates directly to the legislature through the executive secretary and the department head had almost nothing to do with it. It had great power of making regulations. The control of the department head was very slight. The reorganization act, therefore, as amended by act No. 2803 (sec. 79c of the Administrative Code) provides that the department head shall have direct control, direction, and supervision over all bureaus and offices under his jurisdiction, and may, any provision of existing law to the contrary notwithstanding, repeal or modify the decisions of the chiefs of said bureaus or offices when advisable in the public interest.

Thus the reorganization act put united responsibility, abolished the sovereignty of bureaus, and placed them under six secretaries, with power of supervision and control, and subordinated the secretaries, in turn, to the Governor General, instead of the old order in which secretaries could demand similar executive prerogatives with the Governor General, as was shown by the incident between Commissioner Riggs and Gov. Gen. Harrison.

THE BUDGET.

"The forms of the budgets are good," the report states. This was the only mention of that great step which placed the Philippines, in so far as financial systems are concerned, above the United States. It could have gone a little further and frankly admitted that the budget, next to the reorganization act, is the other great reform to the credit of Philippine autonomy.

Here was the old procedure which savored of medieval methods: Thirty days before the opening of each regular session each bureau chief—not the department head—sent to the executive secretary a statement of the receipts and expenditures of his bureau or office during the year and an estimate of the receipts and necessary expenditures thereof for the ensuing fiscal year. Like the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, the executive secretary simply compiled these estimates and sent them to the legislature. He had no power of revision or coordination. There was no executive responsible for the fiscal plan of the government. It was the question of who had the greatest "pull."

Other bills appropriating money were introduced in a hit-or-miss fashion, following no systematized and unified scheme of national improvement. They were considered on their individual merits, and not on a well-defined fiscal plan for the entire country. They were not based on any possible amount of revenue that might be gathered. Thousands of this kind of bills were introduced at every session. Had they all passed, the resources of the country for the next 10 years would have been exhausted. We never knew whether we were expending more than we were earning. We never learned, even more or less definitely, whether we were running into bankruptcy or not. This was shown to be the fact when on the assumption of office by Gov. Harrison there were wide asseverations that the Philippine Government had been running headlong toward financial ruin. "For three years prior to 1913," says Gov. Harrison in his first message, "the government had expended from two to two and a half million pesos yearly in excess of its ordinary income, and in 1913 had expended more than ₱7,000,000 in excess of such income." Seven million pesos in excess of our income! The fact had never been openly communicated to the people or their representatives.

That there was an unpardonable lack of systematized plan in our previous financial system can be easily seen in the number and nature of appropriation bills annually passed by the Philippine Commission and the Philippine Legislature. From April 3, 1916, to March 16, 1916, for instance, 37 acts, carrying a total appropriation of over ₱38,000,000, were passed. The list follows:

Acts carrying appropriations passed by the Philippine Legislature or the Philippine Commission alone from Apr. 3, 1915, to Feb. 24, 1916.

No. of act.	Amount carried.	Object.
1. No. 2519	₱12,000.00	Lepanto trail.
2. No. 2521	2,500.00	Publicity for forest study in Agusan Valley.
3. No. 2523	20,000.00	Locusts and rinderpest in mountain provinces, Nueva Vizcaya, Mindanao, and Sulu.
4. No. 2524	15,000.00	Roads and bridges in Nueva Vizcaya.
5. No. 2525	10,000.00	Cholera in Mindanao and Sulu.
6. No. 2526	35,000.00	Agriculture, industry, health, and irrigation in mountain provinces.
7. No. 2529	10,000.00	For Baguio fair.
8. No. 2531	1,000,000.00	Education in non-Christian parts.
9. No. 2534	(1)	For destruction caused by baguios.
10. No. 2535	15,000.00	For repairs in Bongnet road.
11. No. 2540	25,468,913.21	General appropriation bill.
12. No. 2542	52,000.00	Repair Naguilian-Baguio road for 1916.
13. No. 2543	1,488,491.00	Appropriation for Mindanao and Sulu.
14. No. 2546	16,000.00	For Hotel Pines, Baguio.
15. No. 2547	269,311.11	Current expenses for mountain provinces and Nueva Vizcaya.
16. No. 2548	50,000.00	For immunization.
17. No. 2550	(2)	For obligations on account of friar lands.
18. No. 2575	2,000.00	For creation of fiscalship in Palawan, and other purposes.
19. No. 2583	2,621,000.00	Permanent improvements.
20. No. 2596	100,000.00	Aid to young industries.
21. No. 2598	10,000.00	For "Junta de Productos del Coco."
22. No. 6207	2,500,000.00	Deposits in Commercial Bank for agricultural loans.
23. No. 2610	49,145.09	Judiciary deficiency bill during 1915.
24. No. 2611	118,882.59	Deficiency bill for other governmental offices for 1916. (Total deficiency, 168,027.59 pesos.)
25. No. 2612	2,309,000.00	Part payment for National Bank.
26. No. 2513	15,000.00	Forests of tobacco.
27. No. 2623	10,000.00	Conservatory of Music.
28. No. 2524	(2)	To pay interest on bonds.
29. No. 2625	(2)	For amortization of bonds.
30. No. 2632	7,500.00	For schools in mountain provinces.
31. No. 2633	1,000,000.00	To combat infant mortality.
32. No. 2637	10,000.00	Exhibition at Formosa.
33. No. 2638	71,000.00	"Reambolso" of land taxes in typhoon-devastated provinces.
34. No. 2649	10,000.00	For forest-reserve purposes.
35. No. 2651	25,000.00	For immunizations.
36. No. 2652	(2)	Loans for irrigation purposes.
37. No. 2659	2,250.00	For police quarters, Mountain Province.
Total	38,341,993.01

[1] Not fixed. [2] Not determined.

The table of laws shows a lack of systematized groupings of objects for the easy comprehension of the public or the legislature. At the end of every session a member could not know what had been the main fiscal policy of the legislature. Appropriations for special improvement or economic development are in several and independent bills. Act 2523, for instance, appropriates 20,000 pesos for extermination of locusts and rinderpest in the Mountain Province, Nueva Vizcaya, Mindanao, and Sulu; act 2526 sets aside 35,000 pesos for agriculture, industry, health, and irrigation in Mountain Province; act 2548 provides 50,000 pesos for immunization; act 2598 gives 10,000 pesos for Junta de Productos de Coco; act 2613 appropriates 15,000 pesos for the foment of tobacco; act 2651 adds 25,000 pesos to immuniaation funds provided in act 2548; act 2652 provides for loans for irrigation purposes. All these acts refer to the development of agriculture, and should be grouped together in one bill under that heading. They were undoubtedly drafted by different persons who might not have the same ideas as to the way the agricultural development should be carried on. It is just as likely that some of these bills are at cross purposes with other bills on the same subjects.

Such was, in brief, the system of government finance in vogue prior to the establishment of the Jones law. There was no attempt on the part of the Filipinos to adopt a budget system, for there was no responsible executive to frame it. All executive posts were filled by appointment by the President of the United States or the Governor General without the consent of any representative body.

There was no centralized responsibility in the preparation and submission of estimates. Every little bureau was a department by itself, prepared its own estimate, and sent it to the legislature through the executive secretary. There was no coordination, each bureau trying to get as much as it could. There was no financial secretary to clip the wings of overambitious bureaus obsessed with self-importance. The result was an extravagant, top-heavy bureaucracy, and unnecessary duplication of work and activity.

The old precedure of the submission of estimates was inefficient and medieval. It was patterned after the old congressional system which has just been changed in the United States. These mistakes were corrected with the establishment of the budget.

SPECIAL REPORT SUGGESTS BACKWARD POLICIES.

While in the body of the report the Wood-Forbes mission states that a reversal of policy is not needed now, the second, third, and fourth recommendations all express a backward policy. Let us analyze the second and third:

"2. We recommend that the responsible representative of the United States, the Governor General, have authority commensurate with the responsibilities of his position. In case of failure to secure the necessary corrective action by the Philippine Legislature we recommend that Congress declare null and void legislation which has been enacted diminishing, limiting, or dividing the authority granted the Governor General under act of Congress No. 240, known as the Jones bill.

"3. We recommend that in case of a deadlock between the Governor General and the Philippine Senate in the confirmation of appointments that the President of the United States be authorized to make and render the final decision."

The government of the Philippine Islands, as it is at present constituted, is not based upon legal and statutory provisions alone. It has been largely built upon democratic principles and upon a clear constitutional understanding between the representative of the United States and the representatives of the Filipino people. Every Governor General has taken these factors into account. No Governor General has ever completely ignored these democratic principles or failed to enter into some sort of understanding with the representatives of the Filipino people on important questions. That is why the leaders of the Philippine Assembly were frequently consulted by the Governor General on serious domestic questions. There was no law which required this of the Governor General, but it was done as a matter of policy in pursuance of fundamental democratic principles.

Every legislation passed since 1916 has been in conformity with these principles and the spirit and letter of the Jones law. It was the purpose of Congress to give the post of departmental secretaries to Filipinos alone, except the secretary of public instruction. That was the reason why their appointment was taken from the President and given to the Governor General with the consent of the Senate. The present position of the Governor General has been the result of the Jones law. It simply followed the policy of Congress. Congress must mean a participation of the Filipinos in the administration, otherwise the Jones law would not mean the autonomy that it now means to the Philippines. This was the interpretation given by Gov. Gen. Harrison in a statement explaining the Jones law on September 1, 1916, in which he said:

"The main points of opposition to the bill centered upon the promise in the preamble of ultimate independence, and the power of confirmation of executive nominations by the Philippine Senate. So far as my own personal efforts could be of any influence these were the two points upon which the greatest insistence was laid. With the support of the President and the work of friends in Congress, both questions have been resolved favorably. I am a firm believer that an executive should consult the people, through their representatives, as to who shall serve them in office. This is the vital nerve of self-government. It should never be possible, and it will now never be so here, for an executive to ride ruthlessly over the people he is sent here to govern without due regard for their sentiments and due consideration of their wishes.

That was the understanding of the Filipino people. That is why they accepted the bill. It was simply another exposition of the intent and purpose of that law as proclaimed in its preamble which is "to place in the hands of the people of the Philippines as large a control of their domestic affairs as can be given them without, in the meantime, impairing their exercise of the rights of sovereignty by the people of the United States, in order that, by the use and exercise of popular franchise and governmental powers, they may be the better prepared to fully assume the responsibilities and enjoy all the privileges of complete independence."

THE LAST RECOMMENDATION.

Let us take the last recommendation:

"4. We recommend that under no circumstances should the American Government permit to be established in the Philippine Islands a situation which would leave the United States in a position of responsibility without authority."

We do not know what is exactly meant by this recommendation. If it is simply an interpretation of the preamble by the Jones law to the effect that autonomy must be given the Filipinos to the extent "compatible with the exercise of the rights of American sovereignty," then it is not a new thing. We beg to state that this was followed in spirit and letter during the last administration. In other words, on matters of domestic concern, the Filipinos were allowed to rule; but in matters where the sovereignty of the United States might be called in question, then the Governor General acted. What were those matters which might jeopardize the exercise of American sovereignty? To our mind they were simply those which pertain to order, the protection of alien lives and property, and the international relations in general. This was followed in the last administration. When there was a disturbance, like the Intramuros Constabulary case, Gov. Gen. Harrison would assume the command in person, for all disturbances are a defiance of the sovereignty of the United States. Similarly, all dealings with consuls or matters of foreign property and citizens have gone to the office of the Governor General. If this recommendation means that the United States intends to take direct control and responsibility for every act of the municipalities, Provinces, and every one of the 20,000 officials of the Philippine Government, then we wish to say that such procedure would be tantamount to the abolishment of autonomy in the Philippines. No autonomy is possible under such circumstances.

IT MAY KILL INDEPENDENCE FOR GOOD.

"1. We recommend that the present general status of the Philippine Islands continue until the people have had time to absorb and thoroughly master the powers already in their hands."

Now, this recommendation may mean no independence either to-day, to-morrow, or a hundred years from now! When can the Filipino people "thoroughly master the powers in their hands" To this I will answer, "Never." What are the powers already in our hands? The Wood-Forbes mission admit that we have had practical autonomy. We elect our own local officials and our two houses of the legislature, the department heads are Filipinos with one exception; practically all of the courts of first instance are in the hands of the Filipinos. When will we master, not only master but "thoroughly" master, the power of conducting our courts of justice, our legislature, our varied executive departments, and our local functions? In other words, when is our perfect democracy coming? Even the six great democracies of the world which have been examined by Mr. Bryce have failed to master "thoroughly" all the powers that have been given them.

Popular government is still an ideal which may never fully and thoroughly be realized.

CONCLUSION.

The report will prove a disappointment to both Americans and Filipinos, for the simple reason that it does not propose in itself to settle the Philippine question once for all. The American investors who want to bring money to the islands and the American business men who already have interests in the Philippines would naturally prefer the continuation of American sovereignty; but if there is to be such a continuation, they want to see that it is definite and assured for a stated time, say, 10, 30, or 50 years. If there is to be independence at all, they want to know when it will come, and what future relations will exist between America and an independent Philippines. The Filipinos on the other hand are convinced that the time has already come for independence and are willing to talk about its terms and conditions. Neither Americans nor Filipinos want an indefinite continuation of American régime "until the people shall thoroughly master the powers in their hands."

If the Wood-Forbes mission had only made even an approximate guess as to how many more years!

Provision Should Be Made for the Relief of the Unemployed, the Needy, and Distressed in the United States.

OF
HON. WELLS GOODYKOONTZ.
OF WEST VIRGINIA.
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Saturday, December 17, 1921,

On the bill (H. R. 9548) for the relief of the distressed and starving people of Russia.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, our President, in his most recent message to Congress on the subject of Russian relief, recommended an appropriation sufficient to supply the people in the drought district of the Volga with 10,000,000 bushels of corn and 1,000,000 bushels of seed grain. At present prices this grain could be supplied at a cost of about $10,000,000. The standing committee did not see fit to confine the bill to the people of the valley of the Volga but extended its terms to all the Russians. Furthermore, the appropriation necessary to cover the President's recommendation has been doubled. The reason for thus disregarding the President's recommendation has not been explained.

When the bill was at the amendment stage, having in mind those in our land who were poor and needy, this condition being due in large measure to unemployment, I undertook to amend the bill so as to provide an amount equal to that appropriated for the Russians, $20,000,000, for the distressed, needy, and starving people of the United States. My efforts and the result thereof, shown at page 576 of the RECORD of December 17, is as follows:

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Amendment offered by Mr. GOODYKOONTZ: Page 1, after the section, add a further provision to be known as section 2, reading as follows:

"'That the President be, and he is hereby, further authorized, through such agency or agencies as he may designate, to purchase and distribute to the distressed, needy, and starving people of the United States food, fuel, and medical supplies necessary to relieve such distressed, needy, and starving people in the United States.

"'That the President be, and he is hereby, further authorized to expend out of the funds of the United States Grain Corporation a sum not exceeding $20,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section of this act.'"

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order against that that I did to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE].

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from West Virginia desire to be heard?

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard briefly only. I regret that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TEMPLE] has seen fit to interpose this objection. I can say this, however, that while it may not come within the rules of the House, at least it has the merit of coming within the Constitution of the United States. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

By reason of the technical rules of the House, which are out of date and ought to be changed, I was forbidden to have the amendment proposed voted upon. The only course left for me was to vote against the bill, and this I accordingly did.

My action in this regard was not due to a want of tender feeling toward a people afflicted by famine and pestilence, but to grounds that, to my mind, were fundamental and insuperable. In brief, my reasons for voting against the bill were these:

First, the bill is violative of the Constitution. Congress can only legislate upon the subjects intrusted to it. The powers delegated to Congress are specified, particularly named, all other rights and powers being reserved to the States, respectively.

One may search for authority of Congress to appropriate money for the relief of aliens in a foreign land, but he will search in vain. The nearest approach to such authority is the provision that allows Congress to legislate in the interest of "the general welfare." My theory is that the well-known phrase I have quoted is limited to the general welfare of the people of this country and does not comprehend the welfare of the other peoples of the world.

Congress, under the Constitution, may declare war, and, I presume, as an incident of the war power, may grant relief to the people of a foreign nation upon the theory that this might help us to win the war. Certainly this was done in gifts and loans to the extent of over $10,000,000,000 during the late war, but the war is over. Peace has been declared, and it follows that Congress is utterly powerless to legislate in the premises.

Secondly, the bill goes too far in its scope, disregarding the President's recommendation. The committee has been entirely too generous in respect to giving away other people's money. Twenty millions is quite a large sum, more than $400,000 for each State in the Union, and equivalent to almost 20 cents for each man, woman, and child in America.

Who authorized Congress to donate this vast sum and to impose a tax on the people in order to cover the donation? The answer is, nobody. Congress, according to my view, acted without authority under the Constitution and in the absence of a mandate from the people. In the third place, I very much doubt if conditions are as bad in Russia as some represent and others believe. Three crops have been harvested since the armistice. Russia is surrounded by other nations engaged in agricultural pursuits and rich. Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, and others of Russia's neighbors can help, likewise England. Russia can help herself. Her domain is vast, several times larger than that of our country.

Last year a propaganda was started for the Chinese, but Congress paid no attention to it. It was said that millions of Chinese were going to starve to death, due to bad crops. Now we hear nothing further of the matter, and I doubt if any Chinaman has died from starvation.

Mr. Hoover's "organization" wants to be kept busy. Two years ago they got a lot of money out of us for the Austrians. They showed us pictures of Austrian children that looked to be thin and emaciated. There are American children that are poor and underfed. There are thousands of families whose bread winners are out of employemnt. There are widows without food or fuel. There are ex-service men in our cities who are hungry and cold. There are thousands that are sick and suffering right here at our own door. In my district many coal miners are out of work. Railroad men have lost their jobs. Why, may I inquire, should these not be helped, at least as much as the Russians? The Belgians, the Armenians, the Austrians, the Polish, and now the Russians, have all been helped at the expense of the American taxpayer and to the exclusion of the needy but deserving American citizen.

Somewhere in the world every year there is a drought. Private individuals have a perfect right to give, in accordance with their own decisions, their own money to whomsoever they choose. Foreign Governments and their subjects will get no money by any vote of mine, for the money is not mine to give. Congress, under the "general-welfare" clause of the Constitution, on the subject involved is limited to American citizens or those within our gates, and these I am ready, willing, and anxious to help in all cases where, without any fault of their own, their necessities call for assistance. Wherefore it was not only my privilege, but a duty, to offer the amendment authorizing the appropriation of $20,000,000 to be used by the President in providing food, fuel, and medical supplies necessary to relieve the needy and distressed people within the United States.

I wish to place in the record an editorial from the Clarksburg (W. Va.) Telegram of the issue of December 24, 1921. The editorial is as follows:

THE RUSSIAN RELIEF BILL.

In view of the efforts made by Congressman WELLS GOODYKOONTZ, of this State, to amend the bill providing for an appropriation of $20,000,000 for the relief of starving Russians, it is of interest to note that when this bill finally passed the Senate it carried two amendments, one for an appropriation of $100,000 to help the Secretary of Labor curtail unemployment in the United States and another for $500,000 for increasing facilities for the care and treatment of World War veterans afflicted with tuberculosis. These two appropriations are in addition to the sum voted by the House for Russian relief.

There has been some misapprehension with regard to Representative GOODYKOONTZ's proposal in submitting his amendment to the House. He did not seek to divert the $20,000,000 proposed to be spent for Russian relief to American relief, but sought to tack on an appropriation for the relief of distressed unemployed in this country equal to the amount of the appropriation for the Russians. He was ruled out of order on the floor; but the interesting point about the Senate amendments to the bill is that the Senate did in a limited way exactly what Mr. GOODYKOONTZ tried to have done in the House. The Telegram's Washington correspondent states that the Goodykoontz amendment would have had a fairly good chance to pass, owing to conditions in this country, had it not come in conflict with a point of order.

The tenor of the feeling in both Houses of Congress was similar in regard to the appropriation. The argument doubted the wisdom of substituting Government for private charity as a precedent, but it was shown that the American public had about exhausted its resources to the demands of foreign charity, as shown by the comparatively meager response to Secretary Hoover's appeals to private citizens, and the sympathetic argument of the heart was too overpowering to be denied. There has been considerable difficulty with regard to foreign needs for charity because of the great volume of propaganda dumped in this country by foreign politicians and schemers. Yet President Harding and Secretary Hoover had investigated the situation and had found that there was real and terrible distress in the Volga Basin. They were in a position to learn the facts, and with their recommendations the Congress could hardly do otherwise than to respond.

The following is an editorial from the pen of Mr. Edward D. Woodyard appearing in the Times-Record, of Spencer, W. Va., issue of December 29, 1921:

RELIEF FOR AMERICA.

The citizens of West Virginia can be proud of the fact that one of their Representatives in Congress is interested in the welfare of the people of this country to the extent of trying to give them the benefit of governmental aid before it is extended to the peoples of foreign countries.

We refer to Hon. WELLS GOODYKOONTZ, who, when the bill providing for a loan of $20,000,000 for the relief of Russia was before the House, offered an amendment to it making the funds available for the relief of the unemployed and distressed in America. His attempt was unsuccessful, as the amendment was ruled out of order, but it was prompted by the right spirit, and it would have been interesting to note the attitude of the House had the motion been allowed to come to a vote.

In commenting on the decision of the Speaker Mr. GOODYKOONTZ said:

"This amendment may be out of order under the rules of the House, but it is not out of order under the Constitution of the United States." Which hits the nail exactly on the head.

This editorial was very likely inspired by Congressman HARRY C. WOODYARD, who, although confined to his room on account of illness and paired against the bill, communicated with his friends, urging them to oppose the measure.

If my unavailing efforts in the House had the effect of drawing public attention to the matter and in any degree contributed to the action of the Senate in amending the bill to the exent of appropriating $100,000 to help the Secretary of Labor curtail unemployment in the United States and $500,000 for increasing facilities for the care and treatment of World War veterans afflicted with tuberculosis, I shall be glad, indeed.

Antilynching Bill.

HON. GUY L. SHAW, OF ILLINOIS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, January 5, 1922,

On the bill (H. R. 13) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can add anything to what has already been said on the bill now before the House. I shall vote for the antilynching bill because all my life I have felt that lynching was a shameful blot on the fair name of America.

To think that we who claim to give protection to all alike within our gates have not the courage, shall I call it, or manhood to grant every citizen, no matter what his crime, the chance to prove himself innocent is unthinkable. It is inconceivable how it has ever come about that lynchers have gone unpunished, how we can calmly read an account of the burning alive of a human being by a howling mob, how we can sit by with folded hands and do nothing to blot out this shame of America.

For all the State knows the victim may be innocent. He has been given no chance to tell his story. There may have been some justification for mob action years ago when there was no recourse to the law, no courts to try the case. No sane man with the heart of a loyal citizen could justify mob action now in this day. Civilization does not stand still, and surely we have advanced in the matter of affording the protection of the law to each and every citizen of the United States.

The strange thing is that thousands of American citizens who claim protection for themselves under the laws of the country can engage in bringing disgrace upon that country by participating in these shameful and inhuman practices.

The fact of the atrocity of the crime is usually the cause which arouses mob violence, and it is a matter of history that where race antagonism is added to hatred or revenge, hunger or lust, the fury of the mob is increased to the highest pitch.

The very word "lynch" suggests to the average mind "Negro." I suppose the real cause for antagonism toward the colored race is a remnant of the former servile state of the Negro.

We would be very blameworthy if we did not realize our duty toward the Negro to be as sacred as toward any other citizen of the United States. The colored man fought in the World War side by side with the white man. His record for loyalty was good. He pleaded exemption in no greater proportion, considering his numbers, than did the white man. He proved his allegiance. I can not see why we are not bound in duty to protect him as surely as we are bound to protect any other citizen.

We are told by people of the South that we do not understand for a moment the hideousness of the crimes of the southern Negro. We realize that that is true and that the Negro problem is infinitely greater in the South than in the North. But the crime of lynching, while it is more prevalent in the South on account of the race antagonism which a greater number of Negroes makes obvious, is not wholly confined to the South. Even if it were, it is an American disgrace and should be dealt with as such.

We may not condone the crime committed; we do not condone it. We must maintain, however, that, no matter how hideous the offense or how low and brutal the offender, we are obligated under the Constitution of the United States to give that man the protection of the law. If we let our passions have free rein and take the law into our own hands in infuriated and inhuman revenge and hatred, in what degree are we better than the criminal himself? We may abhor the deed done by the victim of mob law, but we also abhor the crime committed against the United States by those who take the rendering of justice to all out of the hands of the law of the land.

Mob law is not the will of the people generally, and since we hold the best element in the community responsible for the deeds of the community, it is inconceivable how any can rest until the stigma of lynching is blotted out. We are a big community. Foreign nations marvel at the spirit in America that allows such a hideous practice. How shall we answer them? How shall we answer ourselves? How shall we answer to God in that last day, "when whirlwinds of rebellion shake the world"?

Are not we here in this House responsible for many laws? Are we not in an appalling sense responsible in a great measure for the condition of every citizen under our flag? Will we not have to answer to God for the condition of our "Man with the hoe"? Must we not enact laws that will give to everyone the "upward looking and the light"?

Abraham Lincoln, in a memorable speech in Springfield, Ill., said:

> There is no grievance that is a fit object for redress by mob law.

And in suggesting a remedy for mob violence, said:

> Let reverence for the laws be breathed by every American mother to the lisping babe that prattles on her lap; let it be taught in schools, in seminaries, and in colleges; let it be written in primers, spelling books, and in almanacs; let it be preached from the pulpit, proclaimed in legislative halls, and enforced in courts of justice.

Theodore Roosevelt, another great American, said:

> The cornerstone of this Republic is respect for and obedience to the law. When we permit the law to be defied or evaded, whether by rich man or poor man, by black man or white, we are by just so much weakening the bonds of our civilization and increasing the chances of its overthrow.

He calls upon all public men and writers to denounce with all their energy and strength these brutal crimes.

It will not only take time to educate every citizen to a conscientious regard of the law as each of these great examples of American manhood suggests, but, in my opinion, we can not even so fortify ourselves with any degree of certainty against the outbreak of mob hatred and revenge. We must depend upon other means to prevent the crime of lynching. The very fact that lynchers go unpunished increases the tendency to the crime.

The need of a Federal law to suppress such a shameful thing is a sad commentary on our civilization. But I believe that to practically all reasonable thinking men this is the chief way to suppress the evil. I think that every crime that excites mob violence should be punished to the limit of the law but under the law. I think that the punishment for the atrocious crimes which do not end in the death of the victim should be made more severe. But I also think that those who dare to take justice out of our hands and deprive us of doing our duty in protecting every American citizen should be punished to the limit of severe law.

It is my opinion that Congress has the right under the Constitution to enact such a law, and now that we have the opportunity to express ourselves, let us, in the name of justice and in the name of humanity, and in a spirit of respect and reverence for the Constitution of the United States, vote for this bill to punish the crime of lynching.

OF

HON. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, January 5, 1922.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with permission granted by unanimous consent of the House to extend my remarks in the RECORD and print the so-called "slacker lists," I desire to call attention to a letter from the Adjutant General's Office, dated December 30, 1921.

It is my intention to insert these lists on the 5th day of each month until all of the names are printed. No good soldier will be injured by the publication of his name in these lists; but, on the contrary, if his military record is one to be proud of, the publication will only serve to call attention to that record. If by mistake the names of good soldiers have not been eliminated from the record, it will be my pleasure and duty to insert in the RECORD the facts in each individual case and to see that the facts are brought to the attention of the Secretary of War, who is as anxious as any soldier of the late war with Germany to have the records correct. Mistakes ought to be corrected while the men are living and while there is evidence to substantiate any valid claim as to service.

The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, December 30, 1921.

Hon. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 5, 1922, lists of alleged draft deserters, which lists were released by the War Department for publication between November 5 and December 4, 1921, both dates inclusive. A copy of the statement to be printed at the head of the lists is also inclosed herewith.

There is also transmitted herewith, for insertion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, a list of the names of registrants which have been removed from the lists of alleged draft deserters heretofore published in the RECORD, the reasons for such removals being set forth in the second paragraph of the statement which is to precede the lists in the RECORD.

Very respectfully,

J. T. KERR,
Adjutant General, in charge of office.

The following names have been removed from the lists of alleged draft deserters heretofore published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD since the publication of such names:

LOCAL BOARD, COUNTY OF MARSHALL, STATE OF ALABAMA.

730a (703a) Leone La Verne Foote (Leone L. Foote), general delivery, Chelan, Wash.

LOCAL BOARD FOR THE COUNTY OF RACINE, STATE OF WISCONSIN.

848 Edward Matson, Larson Street, Racine, Wis.

The men whose names appear below and who were under the jurisdiction of the local board named were, according to the public draft records, classified and reported by the draft authorities as deserters from the military service of the United States. The lists in which these names were originally included have been given at least one month's publicity.

The name of any man who, since the publication of the lists, has been found to have actually rendered service in either our own forces or in those of the Allies during the period between May 18, 1917, and November 11, 1918, is not included; nor is that of any man who, though he rendered no service during the period mentioned, has, since the publication of his name, been found to have been erroneously inducted or to have been erroneously certified as a deserter, nor that of any man who is known to be no longer living.

Every reasonable effort has been made by the War Department to eliminate from these lists names which for any of the aforementioned reasons should not appear thereon. Should it develop, however, that certain of the names listed below should for any of these reasons likewise be removed notice to that effect will be published in each such case in a later issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

LOCAL BOARD FOR DIVISION NO. 6, CITY OF DENVER, STATE OF COLORADO.

1110 Wm. Lee Bradfield (William Lee Bradfield), 1900 Grant Street, Denver, Colo.

633 Wesley Brooks, 1540 Park Avenue, Denver, Colo.

595 Rob't. Bruce (Robert Bruce), 293 East Colfax Street, Denver, Colo. (R. Bruce, 233 East Colfax Avenue, Denver, Colo.)

1319 Chas. Frank Cardano (Charles Frank Cardano, C. F. Cardano), 1620 Clarkson Street, Denver, Colo.

1154 Geo. Dudley, 1544 Washington Street, Denver, Colo. (George Dudley, G. Dudley, 2137 Stout Street, Denver, Colo.)

1430 Geo. V. Freeman (George V. Johnson), 1450 Grant Street, Denver, Colo.

7764 Howard P. Johnson, 1340 Grant Street, Denver, Colo.

1474 Geo. K. Koale (George K. Koale), 1921 Washington Street, Denver, Colo.

646 Henry Reid McAlroy, 1258 Grant Street, Denver, Colo.

296 Jas. McNulty (James McNulty), 1408 Sherman Avenue, Denver, Colo.

1197 Frank Emmet Miller, 1351 Grant Street, Denver, Colo.

959 Henry Mill Shephard (Henry Mell Shephard, H. M. Shephard), 808 East Eighteenth Avenue, Denver, Colo.

OF
HON. ARTHUR B. ROUSE,
OF KENTUCKY,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, December 20, 1921.

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I objected to the consideration of H. R. 8441, known as "A bill relating to special delivery of mail matter."

I deem it proper to take a few moments to give my reasons for objecting to the consideration of the bill and also why I would vote against such a measure. I objected because in my judgment this is one of the most vicious pieces of legislation ever attempted. It is a deliberate attempt to throttle and cripple our great Parcel Post Service. It robs the producer, the consumer, the seller, and the buyer of the splendid service they now have and the bill could not be more in the interest of the express companies had they themselves drawn it.

The wording of the bill is as follows:

That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to restrict the application of the special-delivery stamp or equivalent stamp, and the special service rendered in connection therewith to matter of the first class.

The Postmaster General has, under date September 21, 1921, addressed a letter to the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads urging favorable action upon this bill. The letter is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., September 21, 1921.

Hon. HALVOR STEENERSON,
Chairman Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Under existing law a special-delivery stamp, or 10 cents worth of ordinary stamps, the words "special delivery" written on the article in addition to the ordinary postage, when attached to any mailable matter, entitles the article to the special-delivery service at offices where such service has been established. It is found to be the practice with many large users of parcel post to use a special-delivery stamp on practically every piece of parcel-post matter deposited in the mails.

The volume of matter carrying special-delivery stamps is so great that it is physically impossible to give it separate treatment and more expeditious handling than the ordinary mail matter. Complaints are received daily because this special treatment is not accorded all matter bearing such stamps. The department is placed in the position of accepting the fee for special-delivery service and being unable to always render it.

For these reasons I beg to recommend the following legislation (copy of bill is inclosed).

Yours, sincerely,

WILL H. HAYS.

This to my mind is the first step of the present administration to attempt to break down not only the law providing for the parcel post but the parcel post as well. Should this bill become a law, the first order the Postmaster General would issue would be one restricting the use of the special-delivery stamp to first-class mail. The result of this order would be that no parcel-post package could be delivered by special delivery. It would strike a blow at our postal system which would be felt by our people in every walk of life. It would vitally affect the farmers and agriculturists to a greater degree than almost any other piece of legislation which could be proposed. Even the florists depend almost entirely upon the special delivery for delivery of their sales. Their orders are often delivered after the deliveries of the day have been made. Is it the desire of the administration to ruin this industry? But even more vital than the interest of the florist is that of the farmer, which this bill not only injures but tends to destroy. The farmer has now a large market for the delivery of his chickens, butter, and eggs by mail. This has been made possible by parcel post, by the aid of special-delivery service almost exclusively, yet this is to be wiped out. Why? To serve, I suppose, another mode of transportation. Not only is the farmer affected in this matter, but under the present laws and regulations, when he orders a package by parcel post he may expect it by special delivery at his home if he resides within 1 mile of a post office or one-half mile off of a rural route. This is all to be wiped out. Is it because of another mode of transportation or the inefficiency of the present postal administration?

The Postmaster General says "that the volume of matter carrying special-delivery stamps is so great that it is physically impossible to give it separate treatment and more expeditious handling than the ordinary mail matter." What a humiliating spectacle of inefficiency on the part of the Post Office Department. This condition does not exist in my section of the country. We have efficient service, and I believe every parcel-post package, whether or not it has a special-delivery stamp attached, is promptly delivered; of course, the special packages are handled by messengers and delivered more promptly than other parcel-post mail. We all know that special delivery is handled by messengers, and if the department does not have sufficient messengers it would not be a difficult task to engage as many as are necessary, especially at this time when so many people are seeking employment.

I hope the Postmaster General will not come to Congress and ask for legislation to deprive the American people of that to which they are justly entitled, for should he succeed in enacting this bill into a law, and the public be denied the special-delivery service because the Postmaster General says it is impossible to give it, will he stop there or will he soon find it impossible to give rural service and city service, and then compel the people to go to the post office for their mail?

We all know that the special-delivery stamp costs 10 cents. We all know that 8 of the 10 cents is paid to the man or boy who delivers the package, and we all know that 2 cents is retained by the Post Office Department and covered into the Treasury. If this bill should become a law the parcels which are now being delivered by special delivery would necessarily be delivered in the regular way, and the Post Office Department would only receive the regular parcel-post rate, thereby losing 2 cents on each package and at the same time perform the delivery work now done by messengers and paid for by the sender of the parcel. The Post Office Department and Treasury would suffer by being deprived of this revenue, and, on the other hand, should the Postmaster General and the chairman of the Post Office Committee succeed in enacting this bill into a law the people in every station of life will be inconvenienced by not being allowed to use special delivery to expedite the delivery of their mail, and also to protect it in transit. I can not give my support to any bill that will restrict the use of the special-delivery stamp. I can not support any bill that will condone or encourage the inefficiency of the present postal administration and thereby prostitute the interests of the public. I can not vote for any bill that will curtail the present parcel post law nor for any bill that will affect the Postal Service except one which will extend the service, enlarge the service, and be of more benefit to all the people. I know every farmer, every business man, every professional man—in fact, all the citizens of the United States except those people who have large holdings in the express companies of the country—would oppose the passage of this bill, and I am glad that I had the opportunity to object to its consideration, of striking it from the calendar, and I hope it will never be revived again.

HON. EVERETT SANDERS,
OF INDIANA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, January 10, 1922.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks, I am inserting in the RECORD a review of the 10 months of the Harding administration appearing in the New York Times on New Year's Day, 1922:

HARDING'S FIRST YEAR—REVIEW OF TEN MONTHS OF HIS ADMINISTRATION BY INDIANA'S SENIOR SENATOR—"A START IN THE RIGHT DIRECTION."

(By JAMES E. WATSON, United States Senator from Indiana.)

The labors of Hercules were small chores compared with the task confronting the Republican Party when it came into control of the Government 10 months ago. The Republican national platform of 1920 had wisely warned the people not to expect the quick completion of the work of national reconstruction. The success of the administration in the work of restoration and rehabilitation can be measured only by the magnitude of the obstacles it was necessary to surmount before a return to national normality could be achieved.

No administration in all our national history has come to power confronted with problems of such complexity and difficulty as those which were inherited by President Harding and a Republican Congress. Those who declare that little has been accomplished speak with small knowledge of the facts and little comprehension of the size of the job inherited by the Republican Party at the end of the Wilson era.

We had passed through a period of public expenditures on a scale that staggers the imagination. In its train was left a national debt establishing an interest charge greater in itself than the total of our annual national outlay before the World War. The public service had become habituated during the war era to an extravagance more easily established than uprooted. Not only had there been an enormous increase in the cost of ordinary civil administration through swollen public pay rolls but the public service had become thoroughly saturated with the spirit of reckless spending. We had become accustomed to speak of a million dollars as we were once wont, in the discussion of public expenditure, to talk of a thousand.

"COMPACT PRODUCTIVE OF CHAOS."

All about us at the beginning of this administration was the wreckage that was the aftermath not only of national but of international war conditions. In our own land 5,000,000 men had been taken from the field of production and set at the work of destruction of all values, which is the business of war. The world conflict had been over, it is true, for two years and four months, but at the instance of our own Chief Executive the completion of peace had been delayed for many, many months while a world constitution was being constructed. When the treaty itself was ratified by nations other than ours, it proved to be a compact productive of chaos rather than of order in Europe. If a rational treaty of peace had been completed, as it easily might have been, within three months of the signing of the armistice, and the nations of the Old World had been permitted to turn promptly to the task of industrial reconstruction, we to-day might be dealing with a stabilized Europe, well on the highway toward rehabilitation, rather than with a continent still ravaged with war and rumors of war and threatened with economic collapse.

NEGATIVE ACHIEVEMENTS.

Let us consider for a moment the achievements of the administration on the negative side. When a house is on fire the flames must first be extinguished before reconstruction can be begun or even planned. This administration has performed a service of inestimable, even if fully unrealized, value in halting some of the major tendencies of the previous administration. There has been no thought and no talk of the surrender of the rights, interests, and ideals of this Nation to any scheme of alien supersovereignty since March 4, 1921. There have been no further steps toward the socialization of industry. There has been no suggestion from high places that private pay rolls should be destroyed in order that public pay rolls may be lengthened. There have been no new departures in governmental infringement upon the just domain of legitimate private enterprise. There have been no White House pronouncements expressive of a theory that Government is the natural and proper enemy of business.

The length of the steps we have taken since March 4, 1921, may not have been as long as many of us would like, but they have been in the right direction; away from the quicksands of socialistic "idealism" and toward the old, solid rock of traditional, common sense Americanism, with its deep-grounded belief in the right and duty of the individual to work out his own salvation. We are forging away from the tendency which not long ago gripped this Nation to make the American people inmates rather than citizens of the Republic.

DEMORALIZATION OF WAR.

When the Republican Party came into power 10 months ago, it found a huge and increasing army of the unemployed, with industry and agriculture deep in the lengthening shadow of depression. Partly this was due to the demoralization of war; partly to mistaken national policies as to tariff and taxation. This paralysis of industry has not been a creation, be it remembered, it is an inheritance of this administration. We had passed through an orgy of speculation and inflation incident to war; the day of deflation and of settlement, comparable to the headache after the debauch, was and is at hand.

A balloon ascension is more pleasurable than the return to earth after the gas in the bag has been exhausted. It is an ancient axiom that paying the fiddler is not so exhilarating as joining in the dance. Signing notes is often easier and more agreeable than paying them.

But what has the Republican Party done on the constructive side?

First, we ended the technical state of war with Germany and Austria, an act essential to the prosperity of this country and the industrial rehabilitation of Europe. Owing to circumstances for which the Republican Party was not responsible, it was necessary to make a separate peace with the Central Powers or have no peace at all. The new administration could not well call a world conference for the promotion of peace while we were still theoretically at war with two European nations. The Democratic minority opposed such a declaration of peace, better fulfilling the party policy of keeping us out of peace than President Wilson did that of keeping us out of war.

Next the Republican Congress passed an act restricting immigration in any one year to 3 per cent of the American population of each alien nationality. This was a step in Americanization long demanded and long delayed. Without reflection upon the foreign elements in our citizenship, which have contributed in generations past immeasurably to the national upbuilding, the time has come when we should cease absorbing a larger alien population than it is possible for us to digest without serious internal disturbance.

The Republican Congress passed an act establishing a budget system, a necessary step in the policy of putting more business into government to which the party in power is committed. The adoption of this system was postponed a year through the veto of a similar measure by President Wilson, but already, under the vigorous administration of Gen. Dawes, it has exercised a wholesome influence in the limitation of public expenditures.

The farmers' emergency tariff act was a necessary measure of relief in behalf of the Nation's agricultural producers. There is inadequate comprehension in industrial centers of the hardships visited upon farm producers through war's reaction. Impoverishment of the American farmer means not only destruction of the purchasing power of half of our population, but a reduction in quantity of farm production and therefore ultimate increase in cost of food to the city consumer.

No apology need be offered for the several measures enacted by the present Congress for the betterment of the condition of the farmer; upon his prosperity the prosperity of the Nation is dependent. An important feature of this measure is the dye embargo provision, highly important to the development of our essential dye and chemical industries. Other important enactments of the Republican Congress may be briefly mentioned:

SOLDIERS' LEGISLATION.

The law establishing the Veterans' Bureau and consolidating all agencies for soldier relief. This is one of a number of important measures in the interests of the World War soldiers, whose service to the Nation was of inestimable value, and who should and will be as fully and quickly recompensed as the financial ability of the Nation will permit. Congress has not been niggardly in providing for the soldiers. From the beginning of the fiscal year ended June, 1918, to the present time appropriations for soldier relief have aggregated $1,462,845,326. As quickly as the financial condition of the country will permit the Republican Party may be depended upon to develop policies in behalf of the soldiers which will demonstrate anew that this Republic is neither forgetful of nor ungrateful to its defenders.

The law amending the war finance corporation act, permitting the issuance of securities not to exceed $1,000,000,000 to aid in the transportation and exportation of agricultural products and in providing credit for agricultural purposes.

The Federal highway act, appropriating $75,000,000 for Federal cooperation with the States in the building of highways.

The maternity bill, pledged by the Republican Party in the last campaign and advocated almost unanimously by the recently enfranchised women of the land. The bill provides for cooperation with the States in the protection of maternity and infancy, and is voluntary rather than compulsory in its provisions for enforcement.

The packers' bill for the regulation of commerce in live stock and dairy products, poultry and eggs, places in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture the authority and machinery necessary to prevent abuses long complained of by farm producers, but avoids radical measures destructive of the industry which have been proposed by demagogues and theorists. This act settles a violent controversy of long standing.

The bill prohibiting gambling in grain futures, while permitting legitimate and useful dealing in the grain market, intended to prevent purely speculative operations believed to be injurious to both producer and consumer.

The naval appropriation bill was passed, with a saving of $86,000,000 below the sum carried by the same bill in the last Congress, and the Army appropriation bill, which reduced the standing Army to 150,000 men and effected a saving of $15,000,000 below the sum carried in the former bill which President Wilson refused to sign.

The law providing $25,000,000 additional for the Farm Loan Board, permitting it to function again in behalf of the farm producers of the country.

The Edge bill amendment, providing for facilitating the organization of corporations for export trade.

The law providing for consolidation of independent telephone companies, making possible the elimination of losses through unnecessary duplication of such lines.

The law providing a method of control by the President of landing of submarine cables, correcting a situation which became embarrassing under the former administration.

The act broadening the organic law of the Indian Bureau, which will cure the evil of legislative riders and appropriations, an abuse of long standing in connection with the Indian Service.

The law providing for an agreement among the Western States for apportionment of the water of the Colorado River, settling an interstate dispute of long standing known as the Kansas-Colorado case.

The law authorizing the completion of the Alaskan Railroad at a cost of $4,000,000. The final estimates of the cost of this road by the former administration having been found inadequate, it was necessary to provide the amount necessary to finish the line or leave it in an unserviceable condition.

The act for relief of those who responded to the call of the Government for the production of war minerals, relieving many producers of small means who patriotically undertook to meet the war needs of the Nation.

Amendment of the Federal reserve act in regard to capital stock of corporations.

An act to reclassify postal employees and readjust their salaries on a more equitable basis.

PROHIBITION LEGISLATION.

The Volstead Act, providing for the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment. Regardless of what one may think of national prohibition, there is no serious difference of opinion among patriotic people as to the importance of enforcing laws, especially laws embodied in the Constitution. Contempt of one law breeds contempt of all law, and contempt of law is not a thing that serious-minded people can afford to condone or encourage.

The Senate passed an act to permit American coastwise vessels to pass through the Panama Canal free of tolls. It is not the belief of a majority of the Members of the Senate that this action involves the violation of any treaty, but is an act of simple justice to our own shipping, fitting in with our traditional policy of permitting only American ships to operate in the coastwise trade.

The House of Representatives has passed a bill creating a commission to refund the debts of foreign nations to the United States, aggregating $11,000,000,000, made necessary by the failure of the former administration to attend to this necessary matter at the proper time.

The House of Representatives has passed a protective tariff measure, and this subject is being made the basis of hearings by the Senate.

Many other laws of importance have passed either or both Houses. Only those of general public interest have been mentioned. They represent a volume of legislation not excelled in size or importance by any Congress in the history of our country.

After all, the question of most immediate practical importance to the people of our country, next to the restoration of national prosperity, is that of expenditures and taxation.

The only genuine tax reform involves reduction of expenditures. There never was and never will be a popular system of taxation. The experience of legislators who have had to deal with this problem is that the only enthusiasm any man ever feels on the subject of taxation is in behalf of some project to put the taxes on the other fellow.

All that Congress can do in the absence of a reduction of Government expenditures is to adjust the burden in the light of a huge mass of conflicting interests and evidence. The idea that there is such a thing as a "popular" tax is preposterous. The idea that taxes can be placed on the backs of a very few is fallacious. Inevitably taxes are charged as an element in the cost of operation by a corporation or of living by an individual and are added to prices and rents.

Since the Republican Party gained control of Congress in 1919, the effort of Republican leadership has been to reduce taxes by reducing expenditures. Until March 4, 1921, we were handicapped by the fact that the money-spending branch of Government was in the hands of the opposition, and all we could do was to cut down appropriations as they were asked for. The first session of the Congress which assembled on March 4, 1919, reduced appropriations for the current fiscal year to four and a half billion dollars, which was a billion and a half less than the appropriations for the preceding fiscal year, a billion and a half less than the Wilson administration asked for its last year, and three billion less than were appropriated for the second fiscal year preceding.

REDUCING APPROPRIATIONS.

It must not be forgotten that half our appropriations are incident to past wars. This includes a billion dollars in interest on our war debt. The total appropriations for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1916, were $1,114,490,704.09. For the year ended June 30, 1917—we had been in the war two months—they were $1,025,419,995.53; for the year ended June 30, 1918, they were $18,892,027,501.58; for the next fiscal year they were $27,065,148,690.75. A Republican Congress came into power in March, 1919, and repealed war appropriations aggregating more than $8,000,000,000. For the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920, the first under a Republican Congress, appropriations aggregated $6,495,461,015.37; for the next fiscal year they sank to $4,780,829,510.35; and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, our expenditures will be $3,909,282,209.46. Congress reduced appropriations asked for by the departments of $5,337,996,723.23 by $1,428,714,512.77, and yet some people say this is a do-nothing Congress!

A part of this reduction is due to the fact that during the year ending July 31, 1921, 93,634 people were dismissed from the public service; since the armistice 320,278 employees have been dropped from the civil pay rolls.

Whatever may be said as to the new tax law—and as I have said before every tax law is unpopular—it is infinitely better than the present tax law. It will produce $728,900,000 less than the present tax law this year; next year it will produce $525,000,000 still less, or a total of $1,100,000,000 less per year than the existing law. Further revision of the tax law within the next year is probable. No one not familiar with the difficulties and intricacies of tax revision, with the conflict of theories and interests involved, has the slightest conception of the labor and trouble involved in a reconstruction of our tax laws, and few understand how many hours, days, and weeks of constant study, conference, and debate by experts and legislators is represented in such a measure as the one recently signed by the President. Every law involving hundreds of items and affecting millions of individuals and interests is necessarily a compromise; no thoughtful man expects a law framed in its every item to suit him. The new tax law is the best that could be worked out of the conflicting elements involved—from that starting point we can work toward improvement.

Thus we have passed in review the work of the Congress during the first 10 months of the Harding administration. It is not necessary to dwell at great length upon the achievements of the executive department, so notable that they have elicited the applause, not only of the Nation but of the entire world. Upon the initiative of President Harding and his distinguished Secretary of State, America has taken the unquestioned place of leadership in behalf of peace and a form of international cooperation for the good of humanity involving no sacrifice of the sovereignty of this Republic, or of the principles and policies described by the general term Americanism.

When President Harding issued the call for the Washington conference, the longest step toward international peace with justice was taken the world has known in all its history. The straightforward declaration of Secretary Hughes in favor of limitation of armament on the existing basis of comparative sea power, the negotiation of the four-power treaty governing insular possessions in the Pacific, the progress made in establishing justice as between China and the other powers, the suggestion of future voluntary conferences for the consideration of international problems, constitute a program of tremendous significance and influence upon the future of civilization. This conference has demonstrated that no supergovernment of force is necessary for the peaceful solution of international questions, if only the will for peace exists among the nations, and without that determination for peace all treaties are scraps of paper and all forms of supergovernment are worse than futile.

NEW ERA IN WORLD HISTORY.

To the solution of this problem of international relationships, rendered acute by the course of the preceding administration, President Harding has brought the irresistible power of enlightened common sense and a consecration to the welfare of humanity which is breathed in his every utterance. A new era in world history has been opened with the summoning of the Washington conference, and if the record of the Harding administration were to be closed to-morrow, it would take high place among the great and inspiring periods of American history.

The Washington conference is the climax of a series of administrative achievements which will ever make the Harding era memorable. Surrounding himself with a Cabinet of such strength that its personnel stands out in vivid contrast with the shifting corps of advisers under a recent Presidency, President Harding has from the beginning proved that he did not regard the Presidency as a seat of autocratic authority, but that he believed in the virtue of common counsel, as Washington and Lincoln did.

Warren G. Harding is not a lonely or a secluded President. The gates of the White House have been thrown open and through them passes day by day in increasing measure the good will of the American people to the modest, devoted, yet capable, fearless, forceful, wise President. No one honestly doubts the earnest desire of Warren G. Harding to lead American people out of the dangers and difficulties in which he found them upon his accession to the broad, straight highway of national prosperity and progress, and there is a justified increasing confidence in his ability patiently but surely to get the Nation "back to normalcy."

It was characteristic of President Harding that one of his earliest acts bearing upon domestic problems was to summon to Washington representatives of business enterprise, of labor, and of the general public to consider the problem of unemployment. The question of providing work and wages for every American toiler willing and anxious to work is one close to the heart of this administration.

Already there are signs of revival, and when the tax bill, lifting some of the loads from the back of business enterprise, is followed by a tariff bill written in the interests of the American producer, the endless chain of American prosperity, reaching from producer to consumer and back again, will begin to move. When the wheels are turning in the factories of America prosperity is sure to come to all Americans, whether their employment be in mine or mill, farm or store. American business is already on the upgrade and the present prospect is that by autumn, under the stimulus of favoring legislation and administration, the improvement will be too pronounced for the American people to think of risking a change in the control of Government at Washington.

The decisive treatment of the Panama-Costa Rica dispute, the firm pronouncement upon the Yap controversy, the clear declaration upon American rights in Mesopotamia, the unyielding demand that Mexico guarantee the protection of American rights of person and property before American recognition is accorded, the firm announcement of American purpose to treat Russia as a civilized Government only when it takes on the attributes of a civilized Government, these are chapters in American diplomacy all written within a year, which add new luster to the record of Republicanism as a party of constructive achievement.

That the record of the Republican Party during its 10 months of complete authority at Washington is not flawless is true. That there is any justification for the violent partisan claim that because it has not done everything it has done nothing is grossly untrue. In 10 brief months the administration has made a start—just a start—but a start in the right direction. There is being renewed within the Republican Party that sense of responsibility and spirit of solidarity which in the long years of its continued supremacy made it the most efficient party organization this country has ever known.

Many matters have moved slowly during the past 10 months because of the decline of the sense of party responsibility and party loyalty, tempting each ambitious leader to become a leader of his own guerrilla force rather than an officer in a grand army. President Harding has pointed out the necessity of better coordination, more subordination, among the representatives of Republicanism at Washington. The gently exercised authority of President Harding as party leader is growing. In all this are signs of hope for Republican achievement at Washington in 1922.

OF
HON. BENJAMIN K. FOCHT,
OF PENNSYLVANIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Tuesday, January 10, 1922.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, throughout my experience in public positions it has always been my desire to render every helpfulness in the direction of securing proper consideration for that great army of workmen who constitute 70 per cent of the purchasing power of our country, and it is with much pride that I call attention to the workmen's compensation law now operative in the State of Pennsylvania. The first bill I had the honor to introduce when I entered the lower house at Harrisburg was in the cause of labor and looking to the protection of labor, and following this other measures were presented having in view the same purpose. It is now with more than a little gratification, after some years of progress along the line of betterment in the condition of labor and a more amicable understanding with capital, that I call attention to an address recently delivered in Pittsburgh by Hon. Harry A. Mackey, chairman of the workmen's compensation board of my home State.

The same is herewith offered as part of my remarks, and I trust may be read by many, for I know that its perusal will be of universal benefit.

The address is as follows:

SPEECH OF HARRY A. MACKEY, CHAIRMAN WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION BOARD OF THE STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA, WELCOMING THE DELEGATES OF THE AMERICAN ASSOCIATION FOR LABOR LEGISLATION AT ITS FIFTEENTH ANNUAL MEETING AT WILLIAM PENN HOTEL, PITTSBURGH, PA., WEDNESDAY, 10 A. M., DECEMBER 28, 1921.

The labor problem of this country can not be solved by conventions of college professors or theorists, or by those who address themselves to the question from the standpoint of the workmen exclusively. There is a mutuality of interests that must be considered, and this whole economic question can never be settled without bringing about the solution of the real basic problem involved, and that is the security of the substantial prosperity of the manufacturers and business men of this country. Prices of labor, which are the rewards of labor, can not be permanent or satisfactory unless the man who furnishes the opportunity for employment is prosperous and is given freedom of action and an unhampered opportunity for legitimate gain. We have had too many theorists and faddists make their impress upon the legislation of this country, shackling business and enormously increasing the cost of production by overlapping of inspection bureaus and by annoying interference with the business man's own business. These times call for patriotic effort on the part of the entire citizenry.

Some years ago Elbert Hubbard penned A Message to Garcia. He told the story how one unheralded and unknown Irishman carried a message from the United States to Garcia at the outbreak of the Spanish-American War. No one knew Garcia's whereabouts. It was necessary to deliver the message, and Rowan took it without question or hesitation. Hubbard took this for a text and addressed the whole civilized world in an appeal for men who would make good and strive to carry out their work in life without complaint or hesitation or question. It was a human appeal that touched the hearts of the world, and before Hubbard went down with the Titanic he had witnessed over 40,000,000 copies of this message printed in every language of the world. We need some one to-day to pen a second message to the manhood of the world. All must turn in to do a day's work. The workman must do his part and the business man must furnish him the opportunity to do this work. Men must not hesitate to step upon other men's toes, and in the great push on toward the goal of success we are not going to be governed by the rules of theorists, by archaic labor regulations or old business policies. Enthusiasm and patriotic endeavor will carry us on and on until we once more are industrially supreme.

The question can not be solved in parlors or conventions. It must be met and successfully coped with in the mills and mines and factories of this country, where the employers will meet the employees in the spirit of fairness and cooperation, and where the employee is going to work for the success of his employer with the spirit of the college football player who trains and fights for his alma mater.

Without this spirit of liberality and régime of fair play and good feeling, we will never get back to where we were, as a matter of fact, we will never get anywhere. Stick-to-it-iveness and honest, hard-working sweat means more than resolutions and fine sounding words.

Our railroads must be given an opportunity to prosper. There must be a larger and more liberal difference between income and actual expenses. The Government must give the railroad brains of this country an opportunity to run their own business, and the railroad men must themselves recognize the fact that the people who have their money in these great enterprises really ought to have something to say as to how the business of the railroad is transacted and how the roads are to be controlled. Regardless of the consequences of the war, because of the tendency of legislation and the attitude of the public toward invested capital, we have been rapidly approaching a time when the attempts of social groups to regulate the other fellow's business and the unwillingness of workmen to cooperate with their employers will bring about a climax whereby the very fabric of our business enterprises would be threatened and our industrial supremacy given a setback from which it would never recover.

As a friend of the man who works, as a man who has given many years of his life in the aid of the man force of this State, I say now is the time for everyone to yield. Adopt a policy of give and take. Labor must bear its share of the burdens, for every citizen has his representative obligations at this time.

These delegates are assembled in the greatest industrial State of this whole Union. They are meeting with citizens who will sympathize with them in every sane suggestion that they will advance to help solve these questions. Our people, however, will be impatient at any demagoguery or any patronizing attitude toward any element of society.

They are standing to-day upon the soil of a State whose total crop valuation for last year was $360,000,000; whose total anthracite and bituminous output was 237,000,000 tons, with a total valuation of $1,003,132,400 for the last year; and whose metal production during the year was valued at $4,980,105,100, with an output of manufactured articles of $9,500,000,000. This output represents tremendous and serious problems. No man is going to gain the patient attention of an intelligent audience in Pennsylvania unless his whole program is one of efficiency and economy in Government as well as business. Our own State is about to set the example, for there is an overwhelming sentiment in favor of an economical administration of State affairs, the lopping off of overlapping bureaus, the disposing of political positions that carry with them no real necessity but are political exigencies, the taking off of taxes from great business enterprises, the abolition of the useless imposition of license taxes and fees for the purpose of creating great revenues, but rather we stand for economical and efficient administration of public affairs.

There has been too much catering to a populistic clamor against men of affairs and real business interests. It has become a crime to be successful, and the man of affluence has been marked for inquiry and suspicion. The wage earners of our State and country will never come into their own until every man, woman, and child wishes the business man well and cooperates with him toward his success in every legitimate enterprise. This will insure labor opportunities and proper rewards for effort, both manual and mental.

OF
HON. LESTER D. VOLK.
OF NEW YORK,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Friday, January 13, 1922.

Mr. VOLK. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution No. 258, providing for a select committee to inquire into the subject of narcotic addiction in the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Rules on January 4, 1922, reads as follows:

Whereas competent medical and administrative authorities estimate that between 1,000,000 and 2,000,000 persons in the United States are victims of narcotic-drug addiction, and many of these unfortunates are ex-soldiers, ex-sailors, and ex-marines, members of the American Expeditionary Forces in the late World War, and the situation arising from the existence of so large a number of narcotic-drug users has created a menace to the physical and moral welfare of the citizens of the United States; and

Whereas this condition of affairs has been complicated and aggravated by administration of existing narcotic laws in the various States and of the Harrison narcotic law by the Federal Government, and many of the rulings of the Federal Government and the provisions of State narcotic laws and sanitary codes of municipalities of the United States, point to an organized conspiracy on the part of certain administrators and physicians to drive narcotic-drug addicts into established sanitaria purporting to treat and cure narcotic-drug addictions; and

Whereas this conspiracy has taken the course of rulings, provisions, and regulations by the Federal prohibition commissioner at Washington, acting for the Internal Revenue Department of the Treasury Department in the matter of narcotic control, and by the passage of statutes by various State legislatures and the regulation of narcotic-drug distribution by various boards of health of various municipalities of the United States, which are contrary to existing medical bibliography, clinical and pathological research, and the best medical and lay experience in the handling of addict patients; and

Whereas the said medical bibliography, clinical, and pathological research, ignored in the administration of Federal, State, and municipal statutes, rules, and regulations, set forth conclusive scientific proof of grave physical reactions in the body of an addict deprived of opium derivatives, resulting in acute discomfort, collapse, and sometimes death; and pathological research shows changes in blood analyses in different stages of the withdrawal of narcotic drugs from addict patients, duplicating in every particular the phenomena evidenced in cases of acute infection and commonly recognized as disease symptoms; and medical records exist that serums extracted from the blood of animals in drug withdrawal has produced the complete symptomatology of drug withdrawal when administered to unaddicted animals of the same breed; and medical history, current and foreign, reports scores of cases of congenital addiction (that is, addiction at birth), and scores of deaths as the result of improper withdrawal of drugs; and

Whereas all of these known facts have been ignored in the administration of the Harrison narcotic law and in the administration of various State narcotic statutes and municipal sanitary codes and regulations, by the issuance of rules and regulations making it impossible for the medical profession to treat narcotic-drug addicts without fear of arrest, indictment, and conviction, or interference and persecution by the criminal authorities; and

Whereas such administration of existing narcotics, Federal, State, and municipal, has resulted in an increase in smuggling, peddling, and illegal distribution of opium and its derivatives, and exaggeration of conditions in the underworld resulting from the existence of a criminal type of addicts; and such administration has resulted also in a virtual monopoly in the treatment of narcotic addict patients by privately owned and operated sanitaria promoting certain routine formulas and cures for narcotic addiction; and it is a recognized fact among competent clinicians that the physical phenomena presented by the addict patients do not lend themselves to treatment by any specific routine treatment; and

Whereas evasion and ignorance of these facts is rapidly increasing the criminal class of addicts, spreading addiction among the curious, encouraging smuggling, and driving hundreds of thousands of post operative and post war addicts of every walk of life to doubtful cures conducted by charlatans and fakers, and these intolerable conditions, menacing the youth of the Nation and the physical and moral welfare of our citizens, can be corrected only by an unbiased and fearless investigation of narcotic addiction conditions in the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Speaker appoint a select committee of 15, and shall include therein all members of the medical profession who are Members of the House, and that such committee be instructed to inquire into the subject of narcotic addiction in the United States, the method of handling these unfortunates, the medical addenda available regarding methods of treatment by private physicians, institutions, and sanitariums, the effectiveness of the present laws, rules, and regulations to control smuggling, trafficking, and abuse of narcotic drugs, and for the purpose of drafting legislation for the control of narcotic drug addiction.

For such purposes it shall have the power to send for persons, books, and papers, administer oaths, and is authorized to sit during the session or recesses of Congress, at Washington or any other place in the United States, and shall have the right to report at any time.

The expenses of the said investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the said committee and to be immediately available.

There has developed a tendency in carrying out the objects of the Harrison law to substitute for the provisions of the act arbitrary administrative opinions expressed in rules and regulations which amount to practically a repeal and nullification of the law itself.

These rules and regulations have been promulgated by those in charge of the administration of the Harrison law upon the representation and statements coming as the official pronouncements of the New York City Board of Health, presented by a particular small group or clique among whom stand out prominently the names of Royal S. Copeland, health commissioner of the city of New York, Drs. E. Elliot Harris, S. Dana Hubbard, Alfred C. Prentice, and a lawyer, Alfred C. Greenfield. Reliable records, reports, scientific information, and experience have been swept aside by these men and in their place has been set up a campaign of publicity intended in the end to benefit this small coterie who seek to control the avenues of narcotic treatment throughout the country.

The agitation emanating from New York City from these men and the department of health is spreading over the entire country and knowingly or unknowingly has evaded and ignored sound medical findings. As a substitute for open discussion of known medical facts there has been set up a propaganda for the incarceration of all drug users, their treatment by routine methods, and complete elimination of the family doctor. An undeniable effort is now being made whereby physicians are to be denied any discretion and power in the prescribing of narcotic drugs and to force all those addicted to the use of these drugs into hospitals exploiting questionable "cures."

I charge that this propaganda has been carried on by Dr. Royal S. Copeland, health commissioner of New York City; Dr. S. Dana Hubbard, of the New York City Health Department; and Drs. E. Elliot Harris and Alfred C. Prentice, the last two active in the councils of the New York County Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

I further charge that Arthur D. Greenfield, a lawyer of New York City, has aided and abetted the propaganda above mentioned.

The peculiar personal views of this coterie with regard to the matter of narcotic drug addiction has found its reflection in a bitter and persistent campaign of agitation carried into the farthermost States of the Union and looking toward immediate compulsory institutionalization of all addicts. Expression of the peculiar personal views of this coterie have even found their way into the latest regulations, issued October 19, 1921, by the office of the Federal prohibition commissioner over the signature of R. A. Haynes, Prohibition Commissioner, and D. H. Blair, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, as follows:

The ordinary addict: It is well established that the ordinary case of addiction yields to proper treatment and that addicts will remain permanently cured when drug taking is stopped and they are otherwise physically restored to health and strengthened in will power.

This bureau has never sanctioned or approved the so-called reductive ambulatory treatment of addiction, however, for the reason that where the addict controls the dosage he will not be benefited or cured. Medical authorities agree that the treatment of addiction with a view to effecting a cure which makes no provision for confinement while the drug is being withdrawn is a failure, except in a relatively small number of cases where the addict is possessed of a much greater degree of will power than that of the ordinary addict. The good faith of the physician and the bona fides of his treatment in a given case will be established by the facts and circumstances of the case and the consensus of medical opinion with regard thereto, based on the experience of the medical profession in cases of a similar nature.

I charge that the foregoing remarkable presentation of supposed medical principles carries out the spirit and letter of the teachings of the above-named men as exemplified in stenographic records of legislative hearings at Albany, the published writings of these men and their oral pronouncements. Before its appearance as gospel in addiction and its adoption by the Internal Revenue Department, the theories set forth were presented to the Legislature of the State of New York in bills appearing in 1920 and 1921, and were followed as matters of policy in administration of the New York State Department of Drug Control, resulting in the complete breakdown of that arm of the State government, so that it was abolished by the legislature. A later attempt to incorporate these theories in the sanitary code of New York City was defeated by the combined revolt of New York State judges, doctors, and druggists, resulting in the provision that Federal regulations would prevail in the sanitary code with relation to the medical and pharmaceutical professions.

It is interesting to pause for a moment and scan the lists of so-called important medical committees from which have come announcements whose influence has more or less dominated the narcotic question for the past two years. For example:

1. Committee on narcotics, Council of Health and Education, American Medical Association. There we find Harris and Prentice.

2. Committee on narcotics, New York County Medical Society: Harris, Prentice, Hubbard, and Healy.

3. New York State Department of Drug Control, stated to have been operated under the influence of Harris, Prentice, Hubbard, and Lambert.

4. New York City Department of Health. Narcotic administration directed largely by Hubbard and Copeland.

5. Legislative committee, New York County Medical Society: Harris, Prentice, and Healy.

6. Health committee of greater New York, whose report was printed in the New York State Medical Journal, May, 1920, as an argument in favor of the Cotillo bill: Harris, chairman; Hubbard, Prentice, and Healy reputed to be members of influence.

7. Cotillo and Fearon-Smith bills (New York), stated in print to have been written by Harris and Greenfield.

8. Report of narcotic committee of New York County Medical Society, read by Prentice. Committee: Harris, Prentice, Hubbard, and Healy.

9. Appeared at Albany in support of the above bills: Harris, Hubbard, Prentice, Healy, and Greenfield.

10. Appeared at board of health to advocate municipal code to conform with these bills: Hubbard, Prentice, Healy, Greenfield, etc.

11. Edltor of bulletin of department of health, New York City: Hubbard.

12. Said to have been referred to from heads of administration at Washington as men to talk to for narcotic information and rumored to exert great influence with local offices of prohibition and Department of Justice: Harris, Hubbard, Prentice, and Greenfield.

We might go on with this at considerable length, but the above are sufficient examples of the concentrated influence of these few men in important places of authority and announcement.

It would be interesting to discuss the actual qualifications and connections of this interlocking directorate, but time and space would be better utilized in outlining the general subject and leaving these matters of detail to a future investigation.

However, in passing it would be of interest to quote from an editorial in the Illinois Medical Journal, October, 1921, issue, which states:

The present attempted interpretations, and so forth, are based somewhat beyond any doubt upon representations and statements and opinions and conclusions coming from people like Dr. E. Elliot Harris, S. Dana Hubbard, Alfred C. Prentice, the lawyer, Arthur C. Greenfield, etc., and also somewhat from statistics and statements and deductions coming from the New York City board of health.

Their reliability and validity must therefore depend upon the qualifications of these people, as compared with the bulk of recorded workers and men of real experience. We believe that without any question at all their reports and statements and conclusions would be utterly overthrown and discredited by comparison with the bulk of reliable record and report and experience and scientific information.

* * * * * * * * *

The absolute reversal of interpretation and administrative policies, and so forth, of the last two years are now more and more matters of open record. The fallacies of the interpretations of present and recent attempt have been pretty thoroughly exposed in the efforts to pass the Cotillo and Fearon-Smith bills in New York State, which they seem to closely follow, as stated in the report of the legislative committee from the New York State Society.

It is almost inconceivable that honest officials would refuse to listen to reasonable requests for honest and competent interpretation. The present interpretations have had nearly two years of trial under administrative regulations and rules and various machinery. Their results are patent and obvious in the present situation. The sources of such interpretation are now fairly openly known.

The report of the committee on legislation of the New York State Medical Society, beginning on page 209 of the June, 1921, issue of the New York State Journal of Medicine, voices mistrust of these narcotic committees and of the "10 men in the medical profession and a couple of lawyers" who have gotten mixed up in this addiction matter.

Again quoting the Illinois Medical Journal, September, 1921, issue:

Who is the Harrison law? * * * The activities of Prentice and his associates have been so persistent and partisan and of such a character as to lay them open to the charge that they were possibly functioning for the purpose of putting over this sort of stuff against the medical profession and medical study and progress, rather than for the purpose of any legitimate and real study of and attempt to relieve the narcotic drug situation. We say this because of the present attempted misinterpretations of the Harrison law, because the same thing is happening in the Federal law that happened in the New York State law—the original intents of the law are being reversed by attempted interpretations. Namely, effort is being made to give to the Harrison law the effect of the Cotillo and Fearon-Smith bills, so that however actually illegal some interpretations may be, the effect is attempted to construe and interpret the Federal law to prohibit "ambulatory treatment." That is one of the reasons that New York is having such an increase in peddling and smuggling to-day.

* * * * * * *

This attempt is a very sinister thing. In reality its perpetrators are trying to influence and to bring about in the Federal decisions and interpretations and rules and regulations, etc., those very prohibitions that they failed to have enacted in the law of New York State. Doctors should not disregard the warnings of the New York State Society's legislative committee report. It contains the meat of the whole situation and its exposure of the crookedness of the workings.

Remarkable as the foregoing may seem, it is eclipsed by the attempted complete institutionalization of all addiction patients accomplished by the further rulings or regulations of the Internal Revenue Department at Washington under the October 19 order, as follows:

The following resolution passed by the Council of Health and Public Education of the American Medical Association at its meeting on November 14, 1920, is pertinent in determining the period over which narcotic treatment should be extended in purely addiction cases:

"Be it resolved, That the Council of Health and Public Education of the American Medical Association indorses the principle expressed in the California law (sec. 8½) which forbids the use of opium and its derivatives in the withdrawal treatment of those addicted to the use of drugs for a period of more than 30 days after the commencement of the withdrawal treatment."

No names of members of the Council of Health and Public Education are appended to this remarkable pronouncement of policy in the treatment of addiction by the committee of the American Medical Association.

On December 24, 1921, I addressed a letter to Dr. Hubert Work, president of the American Medical Association, requesting information as to the facts and circumstances which led to the introduction of this resolution and what action thereon was taken in convention which would make it the official, adopted opinion of the membership of his association. Dr. Alexander R. Craig, secretary American Medical Association, replying under date of January 6, 1922, stated of the report that—

It was referred, along with other matters coming from the Council on Health and Public Instruction, to the reference committee on legislation and public relations.

It stands alone apparently as the opinion of a few men who were present at the alleged meeting of the council of health and is absolutely refuted by clinical and pathological evidence at hand. Yet on this slender and unsubstantial evidence the great Government of the United States has drawn conclusions which affect the welfare, yea, the very life, of hundreds of thousands of our citizens.

The prohibition commissioner further solemnly ordains:

This bureau can not under any circumstances sanction the treatment of mere addiction where the drugs are placed in the addict's possession, nor can it sanction the use of narcotics to cover a period in excess of 30 days when personally administered by the physician to a patient, neither in a proper institution nor unconfined.

If a physician, pursuant to the so-called reductive ambulatory treatment, places narcotic drugs in the possession of the addict who is not confined, such action will be regarded as showing a lack of good faith in the treatment of the addiction, and that the drugs were furnished to satisfy the cravings of the addict.

If the foregoing two paragraphs had been taken out of the mouths of the five gentlemen from New York City whom I charge with working havoc in sane administration of narcotic statutes and regulations they could not have more fittingly expressed the sentiments voiced by these same men.

The principles enunciated completely eliminate the family doctor from any treatment of addicts and lay down arbitrary rules for the practice of medicine which must be followed by the physician regardless of his personal convictions or the needs of the case.

These principles were completely aired at the several hearings on restrictive antinarcotic legislation before the New York State Legislature in 1920 and 1921, and met with just rebuke to the men propounding them. Yet they appear in this solemn screed issued by the United States Government and are followed by the remarkable additional statement:

Doubtful cases [of addiction] or those not falling within any of the above instructions, upon request will be investigated and special instructions based upon the recommendations of the inspecting officers will be issued.

Let this statement sink in. Consider it. The Government in positive terms says in its regulations or rules of October 19, 1921, that a physician may treat a drug addict only for a certain length of time, no matter what physical conditions may arise, or may commit or advise commitment of that addict to a sanitarium regardless of whether there is a sanitarium to put him in or whether he may regard the treatment of that sanitarium judicious or injudicious.

Further personal administration may be had only upon the all-knowing advice and consent of the learned prohibition commissioner or his inspectors, the record failing to show that all or any of these gentlemen have any knowledge whatever of even so remote a medical attainment as chiropody.

Are not administrators just as much legally bound to show honesty and good faith as anybody else? If they misinterpret or brush aside reliable available information, if they neglect or refuse to consider material evidence bearing upon their interpretations of the law or administrative acts, if they carelessly or negligently accept misrepresentations or misstatements of particular groups or cliques, shall they not be held legally responsible for the consequences?

Indicating that the rank and file of the medical profession were not alone in taking cognizance of these attempts against the carrying on of its legitimate practice, in the issue of Harvey's Weekly for the week ending June 5, 1920, under title "Legislative Doctoring," appeared the following editorial:

There is a grave menace of what might be termed legislative doctoring. By that we do not mean merely "doctoring" the legislatures and the laws, a procedure of which we have long had too much. We mean, rather, the practice of medicine by legislative dictation instead of at the discretion of educated, experienced, and responsible physicians. We mean that efforts are being made to invest the politicians and lawyers who compose the great majorities of Congress and the State legislatures with the power to say what drugs shall or shall not be prescribed for sick people, and in what doses that shall be administered.

* * * As a matter of fact an attempt was recently made in the State of New York, and it is reported that one is now being made in Congress, to smuggle through a bill which would deny to physicians discretion or power in the administration of some of the most valuable remedies in the pharmacopœia.

The sinister Cotillo bill at Albany aimed directly at forbidding physicians to prescribe narcotic drugs in private practice, at any rate, to persons suffering from "addiction disease."

* * * The furtive and surreptitious manner in which it was attempted to get that bill through the New York Legislature was in itself sufficient to condemn the thing. In justice to Senator Cotillo, it must be said that as soon as he was made aware of the character of the measure for which he had unwittingly and innocently been made the nominal sponsor he withdrew it. But the incident did not end the menace. The same interests and influences, apparently, which sought to perpetrate that job at Albany are also busy and energetic, in much the same surreptitious way, at Washington, trying to get the National Government to arrogate to itself a monopoly in narcotic drugs.

The American Public Health Association is composed of the foremost public-health officials of the North American Continent. Its members are recognized men of standing. At its annual meeting in New York City November 17, 1921, this body took up the subject of narcotic drug addiction. So distressing were the conditions reported that resolutions were adopted by the executive board of directors of the association recommending a full inquiry or investigation of the subject of addiction. The report of the committee on narcotic addiction of the American Public Health Association was adopted over the sole protest of Dr. Royal S. Copeland, health commissioner of New York City.

The committee recognized that the control of narcotic addiction constituted a medical and police problem, and, in part, stated as follows:

The group of addicts variously spoken of as criminals, degenerates, and feeble-minded is unwilling and unable to cooperate in the necessary treatment and should be kept under official control. In the opinion of your committee the control of this group is essentially a police problem.

The group of addicts who suffer from physical conditions necessitating an indefinite continuance of their use of the drug constitutes a medical problem.

Furthermore, the group of addicts in whom the clinical condition which was the reason for beginning the use of drugs no longer exists or who began the addiction for other than clinical reasons is also a medical problem.

The committee took a further progressive step in the annals of medical literature by clearly setting forth the basic definition for narcotic—opium—addiction. It states:

Narcotic drug addiction is a physical condition in which continued administration of narcotic drugs, from whatever cause or origin and in whatever type or class of individuals, has set up within the body a mechanism of protection against the toxic action of narcotic drugs. This mechanism of protection constitutes the mechanism of addiction disease. A narcotic drug addict is an individual in whose body the continued administration of opiate drugs has established a physical reaction, or condition, or mechanism, or process which manifests itself in the production of definite and constant symptoms and signs and peculiar and characteristic phenomena, appearing inevitably upon the deprivation or material lessening in amount of the narcotic drug and capable of immediate and complete control only by further administration of the drug of the patient's addiction.

* * * A definition along no other lines will include all who suffer from narcotic drug addiction. This symptomatology and the mechanism or process which produces it are the only common and characteristic attributes and possession of all narcotic addicts.

We would emphasize the fact that cocaine, alcohol, and other drugs of indulgence do not fall into this definition, and they and their problems of handling, treatment, and control are quite different and distinct from the matter of opiate addiction disease.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am going to dismiss the other and equally remarkable provisions of the pronouncement of those learned medical men, Messrs. Blair and Haynes and their intelligent inspectors, to get back to article 1 of the Harrison narcotic law. This states in no uncertain terms that restrictions with regard to the dispensing of narcotics shall not apply to—a registered physician, dentist, veterinary surgeon, or other practitioner in the course of his professional practice, and where said drugs are dispensed or administered to the patient for legitimate medical purposes and a record kept as required by this act of the drugs so dispensed, administered, distributed, or given away. (Regulations No. 35, p. 11, beginning with the word, "Provided.")

Obviously the ruling or regulation promulgated by Commissioner Haynes and approved by Commissioner Blair nullify and negative the intent of the Harrison narcotic law as just read into the record. If these new regulations or rulings squared with known medical facts, they would still be open to challenge on the ground that they constitute an amendment to the law on our statute books without reference to or regard for the wishes of Congress in the matter.

In fact they might be impeached upon the further ground that they invade the police power of the States of this Union in regulating the practice of medicine, which is entirely outside the purview of the Federal Constitution as at present interpreted.

It took the eighteenth amendment to open to the Federal Government the right to regulate the manufacture, sale, and transportation and dispensing of alcohol.

Apparently it takes but a twist of the wrist of the Revenue Department at the bidding of ignorant and egotistic, self-centered, and perhaps criminally involved professional men and administrators to put in force in these United States a set of regulations, drastic in their inception, unethical in their administration, and calamitous in their effect.

Let us see, gentlemen, how the sapient rulings of the learned prohibition commissioner, backed by the profound pronouncements of this little coterie of doctors and laymen who seek to dominate the very lives of 2,000,000 addicted citizens of this country, jibe with the less blatant, more humble, but perhaps more truthful scientific observations of medical men who do not seek to make a hippodrome of their profession.

I will lay down for you a few simple observations on addiction symptomatology born of my own knowledge of medicine and experience with addicts and patients, indorsed by hundreds of medical men and supported by the clinical findings of every man familiar with addiction of whatever school of thought or medicine. I will let you judge for yourselves if the habitual use of opium and its derivatives is a habit to be controlled by will, revenue agents, and police.

Be it David or Goliath, judge or degenerate, prostitute or preacher, opium plays no favorites. Race, color, creed, physical and mental ability alike are no bar to contraction of addiction. And once addicted there follows a symptomatology represented by practically unvarying manifestations recognized even by that small band who apparently are backing the latest regulations of the post-addiction school of misinformation conducted by the New York City Department of Health and others and later indorsed by the Department of Internal Revenue.

These symptoms are increased tolerance for the drug of addiction and distinct physical reactions which inevitably follow unscientifically decreased dosage or withdrawal of the opiate of addiction. Here there arises a series of physical manifestations that have long puzzled science, though they have been recognized as the inevitable signs of opium starvation.

These manifestations are sneezing and gaping, sweating and purging, vomiting and diarrhea, heart and circulation disturbances, agonizing pains, extreme nerve manifestations, collapse, and sometimes death.

Every writer of prominence on addiction subjects recognizes these symptoms as the concomitants of narcotic drug withdrawal, and every writer on the subject of addiction with equal unanimity will bear testimony to the fact that administration of the opiate of addiction will almost immediately correct these disturbances and restore the sufferer to normal.

Find me 1 medical man of standing who will deny the existence of these phenomena and I will find you 100 medical savants who can testify to the truth of my assertion. Better still, learn the facts with your own senses. Go to the office of the Surgeon General of the United States. Ask him to pass upon these assertions. Or seek out the hospitals and detention wards in your home town, watch the addicts who are brought in or who stagger in, and through your own observations, though untrained in the learned science of medicine, note for yourselves what these poor devils suffer.

From this point on in the discussion of addiction as a disease or as a habit I proceed with extreme care, because I realize that there stand against me a ring of self-seeking sanitarium aggrandizers, physicians, and administrators whose misrepresentations of addiction subjects has brought sorrow and shame, suffering, and mortality upon a great section of our American public.

There has grown up in the United States two basic and fundamental schools of thought with regard to the treatment of drug addiction. One holds, despite the physical reactions I have enumerated, and which are admitted, that the opiate addict may control his suffering from these reactions and by exercise of his will restore himself to normality, though the proponents of this school usually advise leg irons, handcuffs, and close confinement as the means of bringing about his physical and moral regeneration.

Prior to 1918 and up to the time of its exposé by the Whitney joint legislative committee (New York) the leaders in the line of publicity were Charles B. Towns and his coworker, Dr. Alexander Lambert, proprietors of the Towns-Lambert treatment. Towns faded from the picture as soon as the committee published its findings and has not been heard from since.

In the recent past and at present the leading exponents of the "habit" theory as applied to drug addiction are the New York City Board of Health and the small coterie of physicians so active in propaganda.

Of different calibre and greater prestige is Dr. Alexander Lambert, regarded as one of the most eminent practitioners in the United States and as a leader of a school of thought and practice in addiction subjects which couples routine and specific medical treatment for drug addiction with the observation that post medication must be followed by application of the will and determination of the addict.

Dr. Lambert allied himself early in his addiction history with Charles B. Towns, a layman and sanitarium proprietor with a specific treatment for narcotic addiction which acknowledged all the varied physical reactions due to drug withdrawal but stressed the need of Christian Science personally applied to keep the addict on the straight and narrow path. Belladonna and blue mass formed the staples of the Towns-Lambert treatment, just as other active purgatives form the basis of most of the known routine medication that has grown up in this country.

I will not dwell upon the specific and detailed results of this purgation nor attempt to describe before the Members of this House the different shades and colors, consistency, and solidity of the products of elimination by which the learned gentlemen administering the medication determine the exact status of the will power of the patient so soon to leave the confines of their sanitarium to lead a virtuous life free from recourse to narcotics, by the exercise of self-determination.

The man or woman who went through this routine treatment was declared "cured" whether or not there remained any lingering trace of the physical reactions caused by drug withdrawal. You can learn all about it by perusing the pages addressed to this treatment of drug addiction in the files of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Meantime I will turn to consideration of another school of thought in the medical profession which boldly accepts the symptomatology of drug withdrawal as a disease manifestation, which has no specific or routine treatment for addiction and which does not hold that a patient is cured unless at the end of medication he is free of all the physical phenomena accompanying deprivation of opium or its derivatives.

The late George E. Pettey, of Tennessee, was the American pioneer in this theory of addiction treatment, and his book, Narcotic Drug Disease and Allied Ailments, stands to-day as a milestone on the road to progress in American medicine. Pettey challenged the assertion that any routine treatment would free all narcotic addicts of physical reaction, and supported his thesis with a wealth of clinical observations extending over a quarter of a century. As a reward for his pioneering he remains to-day less known to the great body of American physicians than some who have forced the public and the profession to listen to the more noisy and less scientific reiterations of medical and lay owls possessed of a throaty voice and a fine intonation, who have persistently sat upon a dead limb of the tree of knowledge and impressed the public by advertisement and propaganda.

The next man to rise in his place and declare that clinical observations of addicts and their symptomatology could only be explained in the terms of disease was Dr. Ernest S. Bishop, of New York City, who will go down in medical history as one of the few fearless men willing to stake a reputation and a livelihood on honest observation and truthful deduction. Along with Pettey's book, Narcotic Drug Disease and Allied Ailments, Dr. Bishop's book, The Narcotic Drug Problem, takes sharp issue with the out-and-out habit theorists and that school of thought headed by Dr. Lambert and adhering to routine or specific treatment of addiction. It is a standard work on the subject to-day.

For this opposition Dr. Bishop was indicted, and still enjoys that distinction, through the failure of the United States Government to find out the truth about the narcotic drug problem and apply it. His persecution is a medical and political scandal and an obstruction to solution of the drug problem.

It is said to be the same sort of persecution from the Internal-Revenue narcotic force that resulted in the death of Dr. C. F. J. Lause, of New York City, an honest and recognized student of narcotics and addiction.

Such things cry aloud for investigation for the sake of the welfare of this great country and the medical profession, and it seems to me that the untutored narcotic agents of this great Government under the last administration might have been better employed than in taking sides in a medical controversy involving the broad subject of what will or will not constitute the proper medication in the treatment of addiction. Yet this was done, and I am sorry to say is now being done, by our Government and will continue to be done until the end of time unless some protesting voice is raised against undue interference by lawyers, policemen, and detectives in the practice of the science of medicine and the furtherance of its research and study.

Fortunately the time has arrived when clinical research and personal observation of addiction phenomena no longer stands alone against the wordy impeachment of blatant critics. The laboratory of recent years has contributed indisputable evidence of physical changes in those addicted to opiate which brooks no denial.

Not to take up the time of this House with material which is open to reference by every student of addiction in any well-equipped medical library, I will confine myself to reviewing striking examples of European research.

Adriano Valenti, of the University of Pavia Institute of Experimental Pharmacology, conducted the following experiments:

Dogs of similar breed, weight, and approximate normality were chosen by Prof. Valenti as subjects for his research. One dog was subjected to increasing doses of morphine until it became an addict. Upon the withdrawal of the drug this canine manifested all the symptoms occurring in man under similar circumstances. Blood of this dog was withdrawn after it had been deprived of morphine dosage.

The serum obtained from this blood was then injected into the normal dog of equal weight, size, and similar breed. This animal then exhibited all of the withdrawal symptomatology displayed by the addicted canine and also observable in a human being in opiate withdrawal. Prof. Valenti is still writing and teaching and experimenting on this subject. His conclusion is that withdrawal of opiate administration in the case of animal addiction creates an active disease agent in the blood which accounts for the physical reactions manifested.

Possibly the addicted canine might have recovered from his physical disorders resulting from his morphine withdrawal if he had used his will power. Any gentlemen who would like an opinion on the subject can easily communicate with Prof. Valenti. I may say in passing that his experiments were exhaustively made and repeated and verified.

Another distinguished Italian scientist who has carried on extensive laboratory animal experiments is Prof. Carlo Gioffredi, of the Institute of Experimental Pharmacology of the University of Naples. Still others are Profs. Leo Hirschlaff, of Germany, Cloetta, of the Zurich Institute of Pharmacology, and many others whose works are available for discussion.

If there is any remaining doubt after reading the results of these laboratory and clinical experiments, let the learned gentlemen who would impeach this testimony controvert these authorities in the field of laboratory research, where results may be checked up by competent observers and the moot questions scientifically settled.

I hold no brief for the disease theorists of addiction nor for the habit theorist of addiction. I do not care which cleaves closest to the truth in its tenets, but I am willing to accept the cold logic of the laboratory as it checks up the observations of the clinical students, giving us the only present scientific explanation for this condition.

Therefore, if I may be permitted to venture the humble opinion, it might be well for the Board of Health of New York City and for that branch of the revenue department of our great Union so ardently interested in solving the drug problem to pause in its contemplation of this subject and take some slight consideration of the wealth of bibliography and evidence piled up by medical and laboratory observers all the world over.

Advancement in most sciences has come through just and calm consideration, analytical discussion, and uninterrupted study. And I do not believe that we here in America will advance far toward the solution of the problems presented by narcotic-drug addiction if we ignore persistently the work of competent observers and laboratory experts to set up a rule of thumb with regard to medical science, based upon the opinion of laymen, which in turn reflects the conviction of one class of medical men whose oral gifts permit them to shout louder than their fellows.

You do not call the fire department to treat typhoid. No policeman is asked for an opinion upon the proper medication for mumps. The Internal Revenue Department does not sit in judgment upon drugs administered for malaria. Any man or woman in the United States can have catarrh without appealing to a prohibition agent for permission. But if any citizen of these United States should be so unfortunate as to contract narcotic drug addiction as a result of medication or post-operative administration, he immediately finds that a large number of assistant district attorneys, the police department of his native city, and lastly the Internal Revenue Department of his Government all know exactly what he and his doctor should do to overcome the bodily affection resulting.

If he has plenty of money these pseudomedical savants recommend that he go to Dr. Jones's or Dr. Smith's sanitarium where he can take a "cure" of more or less efficacy, which very likely is challenged by everybody who has been through it. And if this same gentleman happens to be without funds these learned administrators of our laws provide nice, cool jails, where the suffering addict can get every attention that their humanity suggests, including incarceration in a padded cell and a liberal douching with a fire hose upon occasion.

If this were a fight between two or more factions of the medical profession which did not so vitally involve the welfare of our Nation, it would present a farce comedy of high caliber. Unfortunately, however, the method in vogue for the handling of addiction in America has its direct reflection upon the economic and social life of our communities.

It behooves us, therefore, to use every care in our deliberations upon this grave subject and to be extremely cautious as to whose medical chestnuts we are pulling out of the fire.

To even the lay observer it must be apparent that there is a wide difference of opinion among medical men, and I speak to you as a medical man upon the subject of addiction treatment.

Some authorities have even stated that there is available no method of medication or standard treatment which will surely relieve the addict patient from the grave physical reactions resulting from withdrawal of opiates.

This was the opinion in 1917 of the Whitney joint legislative committee investigating habit-forming drugs in the State of New York, a committee which was created at a cost of tens of thousands of dollars to the taxpayers of the State and which held exhaustive and unbiased hearings to which the foremost addiction authorities in our country were invited.

This also was the opinion of the so-called McAdoo Committee of the Treasury Department which, in 1918, conducted an investigation of addiction subjects.

In the report of the special committee of investigation appointed March 25, 1918, by the Secretary of the Treasury to study the "traffic in narcotic drugs," published June, 1919, by the Treasury Department, on page 28, last paragraph, is stated:

It is also recommended that both public and private medical organizations which have research facilities be requested to undertake studies to determine the nature of drug addiction with the view of improving the present forms of treatment or evolving some new and more efficient method of handling these patients. The latter statement is made in view of the fact that at the present time there are numerous forms of treatment for drug addiction, none of which appear to have been given a thorough trial by the medical profession, as a whole, or to have received the unqualified support of those members of the profession who have had no financial interest in the matter.

As a result, the policies of the Internal Revenue Department were administered along broad lines which, on the one hand, maintained rigid supervision over the manufacture, sale, and distribution of narcotic drugs, and on the other encouraged study of this subject by men of the medical profession.

The Board of Health of Louisiana, alarmed at the growth of morphine addiction and the ruinous victimizing of patients through underground peddling of the drugs, opened a clinic in New Orleans, where addicts were under the continuous oversight and care of the best physicians, and where they received the drugs at cost price. The plan was very successful. Underground peddling practically disappeared, and the situation was very much better.

About November, 1920, without reason or explanation, the Bureau of Internal Revenue at Washington ordered the institution closed. The first order being ignored, a second order was issued, which was reluctantly obeyed. The result was that the patients were again driven to the underworld and the situation became as bad as before.

At Los Angeles and San Diego, Calif., similar clinics were inaugurated with marked success. The same mysterious orders came to California that were given to Louisiana, backed up with a special agent from San Francisco to see that the orders were executed. The only explanation obtainable for the above remarkable happenings was that the department at Washington had "changed their minds."

Along these lines the Whitney legislative committee recommended to the State of New York the enactment of legislation which sought the cooperation of the physician as well as of the hospital and the sanitarium in caring for addicts. This policy of dealing with addiction was not reversed until for some unknown reason the board of health of the city of New York decided that it alone possessed all the knowledge within the purview of the medical fraternity, and began the old game of forcing others to fall in line by administrative and legislative pressure.

It is true that these legislative programs did not solve the drug problem, but during the short time that the Federal Government and the State of New York and other States laid out their policies of cooperation with all elements of the medical profession there was an interest evinced in the sociological and clinical solution of addiction that was bearing fruit. Physicians felt that they could safely give time and attention to the study of addiction treatment without fear of molestation by the police. The result was a free exchange of ideas upon this subject and a reclamation of the honest addict from the grip of the underworld peddler.

Then gradually came the tearing-down process, which has resulted in the wholesale indictment of physicians and the imposition of present rules and regulations in complete reversal of earlier findings and policies.

I desire to explain to you just what are the social reactions upon the community of these two policies of handling addiction forces. And I also want to state here the reasons for this social phenomena as it may be expressed in the term "types of addicts."

Through the police courts of every great city in the Nation there is a daily parade of criminal and noncriminal drug users. In this particular strata of society the criminal element is in the majority. If the drug user is arrested for a criminal offense, the fact that he is deprived of drugs through incarceration soon makes itself known by development of the physical reaction resulting from drug starvation, as I have already outlined to you.

This is the type of individual addict which receives frequent mention in the newspapers, which is constantly kept in the public eye, and which has in many cases earned the harsh terms in which addiction is popularly expressed.

This type of addict, however, is regarded by most competent authorities as being in the great minority, for drug addiction is no respecter of persons and is manifest in every strata of society.

The better class of addict, the average addict, usually is able to fight his battle and control his addiction with the aid of friends and money, and to keep out of the public prints. In most cases he has become an addict as a result of medication or post-operative administration of narcotics. Histories are on record where addiction has been created as a result of relatively short narcotic administration.

This man deserves and should command competent medical attention and the best help within the reach of science in the handling of his condition. He has no criminal tendencies, and he will not become a criminal unless he is forced by need of the drug to association with criminals or the commission of an act which shall invoke the law.

If this type of addict is open to study and treatment by competent family physicians, he keeps within the bounds of good behavior and usually in a reasonable degree of normality and health and economic productivity. He may or may not try one or more of the routine "cures" for addiction. Usually if he has money, he tries every avenue that promises relief from drug necessity, and usually through long experience he becomes extremely skeptical as to the claims of the advertised "cures" and "treatments."

Under the methods of administering narcotic statutes now in vogue this addict must go to an institution to receive treatment under confinement, and he must be cured in name when he leaves that institution because the law so implies.

These private sanitarium treatments are expensive. Many or most of the decent addicts have not the means and many more have not the courage again to invoke some of their drastic regimens. Both classes, shut off from attention by legitimate physicians, are driven to the street-corner peddler and the underworld for narcotic supply.

The result is a tremendous increase in smuggling and illicit traffic in drugs, arrests and convictions for illicit possession, and the incarceration of many innocent individuals in city jails and institutions where it is common knowledge they are herded with degenerates and worse. To put it plainly, this is making criminals of innocent people and involves aggravation of underworld conditions which has its reflection in court records and the newspapers.

The McAdoo committee states that—it has been computed • • • that the average annual expenditure for an addict to satisfy his addiction amounts to $61.18. Upon this basis of cost of drugs alone, the addicts of this country annually pay over $61,000,000 for the satisfaction of addiction.

This is the natural commercial opportunity caused by the reaction created by the closing of legitimate and honest sources of medical attention to addicts.

The committee further goes on to state:

It is concluded from a careful analysis of these figures, as well as those obtained by other investigators who have made a study of this problem, that at least 25 per cent of the addicts are not steadily employed in gainful occupations. This would represent at least 250,000 unemployed addicts in the United States. At a conservative estimate this would represent the loss in wages of $150,000,000 annually. These figures, however, do not include the cost of drug addiction to individuals as a result of loss through theft and burglary, nor the cost to the States and municipalities in the suppression and punishment of crime and the care and treatment of those who eventually become a charge upon the community.

Many of these unfortunates are veterans of the late World War, addicts because of treatment in field and base hospitals. I feel and I believe that we have no right to impose upon these men the mental degradation and the physical suffering entailed by our present arbitrarily imposed system of addict handling, which simply takes sides in a medical controversy and visits humiliation upon the drug user.

Mr. Speaker, I realise that these remarks are being drawn out somewhat longer than I had originally intended. Yet I have but barely scratched the surface of the wealth of material or the facts which I have in my possession. I can sum up in no better way than by again quoting from the editorial of June 5, 1920, of Harvey's Weekly:

Drug addiction is undeniably a very great evil, which is probably increasing in extent. Undeniably, too, some of the grosser forms of it are to be checked and abated by legislation and by police administration. But the most important part of it can be dealt with efficaciously only by competent and conscientious physicians in private practice. To forbid such treatment of it would be to place sufferers at the mercy of "institutions" which most of them would rather die than enter, or of the purveyors of "sure cures" of the most pernicious type. It may be that further legislation, State or National, is needed on the subject. But it is absolutely certain that no such legislation should be enacted without the fullest possible publicity, or without first having a competent and open investigation, which would bring all the conditions and facts to the intelligent attention of the lawmakers. There must be no more "sneak" legislation to enable designing men either to exploit the vices or to batten upon the afflictions of their fellows.

It is in the hope that this body will see fit to begin an unbiased and much-needed investigation of addiction conditions, upon which old laws and rulings may be revised and the highest degree of consideration for the very great need for knowledge upon all phases of this complex sociological scientific subject that I press the adoption of my resolution.

OF
HON. W. W. GRIEST,
OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, January 12, 1922.

Mr. GRIEST. Mr. Speaker, the village mail delivery in towns of less than 10,000 population was authorized in 1912, being based on a bill which I first introduced in the Congress in 1909. Departmental influences were hostile to it for several years, but in 1916 the Postmaster General admitted its efficiency and success. Up to that time the service had been experimental, but in the appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, the word "experimental" was stricken out and the service became permanent law.

Its growth was rapid. The village delivery system is now in operation in 752 post offices, covering all of the States of the Union and about 300 congressional districts.

Not until recently, since the system became permanent law, has a question of the merit and necessity of delivery of mail in the towns of less than 10,000 population been raised. Whereupon I caused inquiry to be made of Members of Congress, postmasters, and of civic organizations in touch with post offices of this character. Of the 752 offices I have letters, reports, and petitions concerning about 500. Only three of the letters and reports indicate indifference as to the fate of the system.

It is fair to say that 99.5 per cent of the letters from the various towns having village delivery describe the service as important, satisfactory, and essential to the efficiency of the Postal Service. In many cases it was stated that the discontinuance of the service would not result in economy as, if the carrier delivery of mail is discontinued, it would be necessary to employ additional clerks in the post offices and rent additional post-office space, the point being made that the space in the majority of the offices is not sufficient if the parcel-post mail can not be distributed by carriers. As most of the towns where the service is established have a population in excess of 1,500, the statements indicate that to return to the old system of delivering mail in the offices would result in confusion, congestion, and inefficiency, which would be costly to the department, and in a number of cases it is said that if village delivery is discontinued the department will have to substitute the more expensive City Delivery Service.

The reports are overwhelming to the effect that mail delivery in those towns is a pronounced success, financially and economically, and of distinct advantage to the Government and the people.

I submit the following compilation, furnished by the department at my request, of the 752 towns in which village mail delivery was in operation December 1, 1921. The offices are grouped in States, with congressional district number and number of carriers stated:

This system of the Postal Service has been very economically administered; it produces a return to the Government not only in a business and financial way, but through various indirect channels and at the same time provides celerity and certainty in mail service to a class of citizenship which represents the highest standard of American home and industrial ideals. Persons who have not examined into the situation in these towns of 1,000 to 10,000 where the new mail delivery system has been installed will find upon inquiry that the beneficial results from the installation of the new service have been surprisingly great.

Congress has given city delivery to 50,000,000 people and rural delivery to half as many more, and there are many and sufficient reasons why Congress shall make life more comfortable and convenient for the millions of people who reside in our active and prosperous towns of less than 10,000 population by continuing to afford them ample mail facilities, the annual report of the Postmaster General to the contrary notwithstanding.

Post Office Appropriation Bill—Uncle Sam's Postal Organization and Intelligence Messengers.

REMARKS
HON. S. D. FESS,
OF OHIO,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Friday, January 13, 1922.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, your committee deserves the plaudits of the country for the very concrete and effective reform in the drafting of the appropriation bills as shown in this your first real report after the budget system is operating under the Director of the Budget. You have displayed the possibilities of this reform not only in the savings it makes, but also in the unifying of all the expenditures for this great agency of the Government in one bill instead of several, and thus prevent the inevitable duplication of expenditure.

The committee will have the support of the country also because of its decision to take no backward step in this service. From the beginning of the Government the Postal Service is the one agency that connects the Government directly with the people, and as such is looked upon by the people with a peculiar interest of ownership. This service had a very small beginning. It is said that Ben Franklin, the first man to hold the position that has come to be known as the Postmaster General, used his hat as a post office for the distribution of the mail. From this small beginning we now have an organization which ramifies not only to every nook and corner of our own country, but through international cooperation to almost every point in the civilized world, and carries appropriations of staggering figures.

From the great Franklin handling all the mail of the country with little assistance, we now have here in the Capital the Post Office Department, headed by a Postmaster General with four assistants. This organization alone, domiciled here in Washington, requires an expenditure for one year provided in this bill of over $4,000,000 in payment of salaries.

The First Assistant has under him a force of experts who have the immediate direction of the postmasters and assistant postmasters throughout the United States. The enormous importance of this particular work is suggested by the amount carried in this bill for the purpose. For pay of the postmasters alone the bill provides $43,000,000. For pay of the assistant postmasters in first and second classes we have an allowance of $6,000,000 in this bill. The compensation for clerks and employees in these first and second class offices as provided in this bill amounts to $100,000,000.

The postmaster in any city or town is rightfully regarded as a leader in his community. His influence should, and usually does, shed credit to the Government he serves. In this way the Federal Government is directly connected with every center, large and small, and quite naturally brings the power and influence of the Nation to every locality.

While the Postmaster General is the responsible head over all, his First Assistant is sometimes looked upon as the business figure which brings the administration close to every city. He must be a man of real ability. The same requirement is made of the Second, Third, and Fourth Assistants.

The latter is regarded closer to the rural country, as he has charge of the Rural Carrier Service. As the First Assistant brings the National Government close to the centers, the Fourth Assistant brings it close to the rural communities. He has charge of the rural service both in fourth-class offices and all the rural carriers.

The country scarcely knows the stupendous dimensions of the Postal Service in all its ramifications. Even Congressmen are unaware of it until we come to act upon such supply bills as this one now before us. The offices are divided into classes—first, second, third, and fourth. There are in the United States 800 first-class offices, 2,779 second class, 10,737 third class, and 37,733 fourth class, making a total of 52,050 post offices. This department of the Government continues to expand. This is inevitable, as it is a fair barometer of the business of the country.

The latest addition and one of the most important is the Rural Mail Service. This service which started a few years ago as a mere experiment is now one of the most important and one requiring a vast outlay of money. This bill carries for that feature alone $86,800,000, and $15,000,000 additional is allowed for vehicle demands. This one allowance in the Postal Service is perhaps the greatest item to make country life desirable than any other. It brings the farmer and family as close to the great world as if they lived in the center of things. It has vanished the ignorance and loneliness of the former days on the farm and has provided, together with good roads, automobile, and telephone, all the comforts heretofore allowed to the city. These additions have made the farm the preferred location. It must be in the future looked upon as the most desirable place to live.

The mail box set out in front of the farmhouse is a constant reminder of the mindfulness of Uncle Sam. The carrier is his messenger, bearing to the country population the latest occurrences in the world, which transforms him from the usual country folk of other days to a citizen of the world, who daily keeps in touch with the big outside world. As the postmaster is regarded a leading citizen of his community, with the backing and good will of the people he is called upon to serve, so the rural carrier is a preferred citizen chosen for the work by competitive examination, and necessarily ranks well in his community.

In order to render this a desirable service which will enlist the best talent in a community, the Government has provided this method of selection, with the assurance or guaranty of a continued tenure dependent upon his willingness and ability to render good service. This policy is designed to build up a body of the most efficient and courteous servants of the Government. It has had that effect. There are in this service today throughout the country an army of well-trained servants on behalf of public interest and they constitute a most satisfactory Government service. The rural carrier is ever looked upon as Uncle Sam's messenger and, as a rule, is given a preferred position when met on the thoroughfare in pursuit of his governmental duty.

To increase further the mail facilities the special-delivery service was instituted, employing special messengers to deliver the mail matter directly to the place directed. For this purpose the bill appropriates $6,500,000.

One of the sources of greatest outlay for mail service is for the transportation of the mail. For steamboat transportation we allow $1,450,000; for rail transportation, $86,000,000; for foreign mails, aircraft, and steamboat, $6,500,000; for pay of Railway Mail Service of the personnel force, $43,600,000; mail-messenger service, $6,500,000; for transportation of postal clerks, $2,750,000. Compensation of watchmen and laborers in these offices amount in addition to $4,530,000. Compensation for clerks in contract offices will amount to an additional amount of $1,300,000. The amount of expenses for rent, light, and heat for these offices is $11,600,000.

As throughout the rural sections the rural carrier can be seen, so in every city of significance throughout the Nation can be seen the uniform of Uncle Sam, who at regular periods delivers to the homes in the cities in the most expeditious time possible the communications coming from every point of the country. For the pay of these messengers and substitutes this bill provides the enormous sum of $78,000,000. In addition to this service, village delivery is continued, and may be expanded by an appropriation of $1,500,000. This is a wise measure and shows the purpose of the Government to take no backward step.

This is the Government's greatest business. The stupendous work is under the Postmaster General, who, as I said before, has four assistants. The Postmaster General has general supervision over the entire service. This bill recommends for the office of Postmaster General here in Washington $2,150,850. For the office of the first assistant there is appropriated $266,901,500. For the office of the second assistant there is appropriated $152,343,000. For the office of the third assistant there is recommended $10,911,025. For the fourth assistant there is recommended $119,557,050. The total amount recommended for the coming year is the stupendous amount of $555,964,375, a sum vastly beyond the total cost of building the Panama Canal. And this is for one year.

This service is the most immediate touch the citizen has with his Government. The business is enormous. Its importance is beyond estimate. The personnel is, as a rule, of a high order. The service continues to grow in extent and also in efficiency. The present administration is attempting to place the department upon a business basis to insure an elevation of service, a better response of the postal employees to the needs of the public, and a greater credit reflected upon the Government which maintains the service.

Connection with this service is coming to be most desirable and eagerly sought.

OF
HON. ALBERT H. VESTAL,
OF INDIANA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Wednesday, January 11, 1922.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD on House bill 7077, I desire to say that, in view of the fact that in the course of the debate on the floor of the House when the bill H. R. 7077 was under discussion, I made the statement that the salaries proposed therein were within the range of salaries set out in the reclassification bill; and in view of the further fact that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] has had inserted in the RECORD of Wednesday, January 11, at page 1069, a table or comparison of the present salaries paid in the Patent Office and the salaries proposed in H. R. 7077, extending from the commissioner on down, with the salaries fixed in the reclassification bill, I desire to submit figures and tables in support of my contention that the salaries so fixed in the Lampert bill (H. R. 7077) are within the range of salaries provided for in the reclassification act with the exception of the salary of the first assistant commissioner, whose remuneration was fixed at $5,500, but which, upon my motion, was reduced to $5,000. With this amendment adopted all the salaries in the Lampert bill now come within the range of salaries in the grades where the officers and employees would or should be allocated under the reclassification bill.

First, let us consider the commissioner. The Lampert bill proposes a salary of $6,000. Under the reclassification bill, which was framed on the proposed reclassification act prepared under the direction of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, the chairman of which is the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH], on page 42 will be found the "patent-examiner group." This group is divided into six grades and includes—> those offices or employments of the professional service in which incumbents are required to perform or supervise work requiring specialized knowledge of patent law or of the technical examination of patents, trade-marks, or designs.

Under the proposed reclassification and the reclassification act as passed the commissioner is placed in grade 6, and the salary range in that grade is $5,400, $6,000, and $6,600. There certainly can be no contention that the salary fixed in the Lampert bill for the Patent Commissioner does not come within this range included in the reclassification bill as passed.

Then come the first and second assistant commissioners. The Lampert bill proposes a salary for the first and second assistants of $5,000. It must be remembered that the first assistant commissioner and the second assistant perform duties under the statute identically the same. They are assigned cases by the commissioner, and the statute places upon them the duty of deciding these cases in the same manner as though they were acting as the commissioner. There is absolutely no difference in the work or in the responsibility of the first and second assistants. An appeal does not go from them to the commissioner or to the Secretary of the Interior, but directly to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia. The judicial work which is not attended to by the commissioner is divided as nearly equally as possible between the two assistants, and both of them are holding court five days a week and at the same time, but in different court rooms.

However, under the table set out by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH], he has made a distinction between the first and second assistants not warranted in fact, and he has placed the first assistant in grade 5 and the second in grade 4, when, as a matter of fact, under the proposed reclassification act, on page 43, the Assistant Commissioner of Patents is placed under grade 5. The fact that there is no difference in the duties or responsibilities of the first and second assistants brings the second assistant within the same grade.

The salaries proposed in the reclassification act are as follows, $4,850, $5,100, and $5,460.

We next take up the examiners in chief. The Lampert bill provides a salary of $5,000 for the examiner in chief. Under the table set out by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] the examiner in chief is placed in grade 4, while in the reclassification act, on page 43, he is placed in grade 5, and rightfully so, as the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, no doubt, in investigating the duties of the examiner or examiners in chief, found that the examiners in chief of the Patent Office, five in number, are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and at the time of their appointment were given the same salary as the United States district judges. They do appellate work entirely, and if they decide an invention is patentable, their decision is never reviewed by the commissioner. They "carry on the most advanced professional work," and perform practically the same judicial work as the commissioner, except that they do not have his administrative duties. Moreover, by law, they are required to qualify in two distinct professions—law and applied science. This brings them clearly within the provisions of grade 5.

We now come to the solicitor or counselor. His duty is to represent the commissioner as counsel in hearings before courts of appeal in the District of Columbia, and in these cases, which number many each year, he has opposed to him the best patent lawyers from all parts of the country which the biggest corporations can employ. In addition, he has to act as counsel for the commissioner in all mandamus cases before the courts, in all actions provided for by Congress under section 4915 of the Revised Statutes, and in all public use proceedings before the courts. It is doubtful if there is any solicitor in the Government service who has more important work; and I submit that he belongs in grade 5, as set out in the reclassification act, that being referred to as the—senior professional grade, and shall include all classes of positions in this service, the duties of which are to act as assistant head of a large professional organization, or as administrative head of a major division of such an organization, or as head of a small professional organization, or to serve as a consulting specialist.

The solicitor, or counsel, certainly serves as a consulting specialist and could belong nowhere except in grade 5.

I find on page 36 of the proposed reclassification act, under the head "Lawyer group," that counsel is placed in grade 5; and I submit that the work of such counsel is no more difficult nor responsible than that of the solicitor or counsel of the Patent Office, and that he belongs in grade 5.

We next come to the chief clerk, and under the Lampert bill he is given a salary of $4,000. In the table prepared by the gentleman from New Jersey he is placed in grade 6 of the clerical service; yet when we turn to page 43 of the proposed reclassification act, upon which the reclassification act as passed was framed, we find the position of chief clerk of the Patent Office is under grade 4 of the professional service, for the reason that the chief clerk of the Patent Office, as required by statute, must qualify as a patent examiner, and under that grade the salaries range $3,720, $4,020, $4,320, and $4,620. So again we see that the salary fixed for this position under the Lampert bill comes within the provisions of the reclassification act as passed.

We next come to the law examiners and principal examiners, and turning to page 43 of the proposed reclassification act we find under grade 4 a provision for "senior patent examiner," and so forth. The duties set out in this grade correspond exactly with the duties of the law examiners and the principal examiners, but the senior patent examiner is designated in the Patent Office as "principal examiner," and the duties defined here apply to no other position, while the term "senior patent examiner" (law) applies to the present designated law examiners. The Patent Office has no employees called by such titles, but these are grouped as law examiners and principal examiners.

Now, let us see what the reclassification bill as passed provides under grade 4. It reads:

A full professional grade, including all classes of positions in the service, the duties of which are to perform independent and highly expert professional work, or to be responsible for the administration of a minor division of a large organization, or a major division of a small organization doing such work.

Each of the 48 principal examiners performs independent and highly expert professional work, and, moreover, is in charge of a minor division of a large organization. Each of these examiners has from 8 to 10 professional assistants, besides the ordinary clerks, and their work is of such an independent and highly expert professional character that if they decide an invention to be patentable there is no appeal from the decision.

Inasmuch as nine-tenths of the patents granted are granted without appeal, these examiners are therefore the courts of last resort in deciding if inventions are patentable. If cases are decided by these examiners not to be patentable, then, and then only, is there an appeal to the board of appeals, which consists of the five examiners appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. There are five law examiners, and under the Lampert bill the salaries proposed for them are $4,000, and 48 principal examiners at $3,900 each. They should come within grade 4, where the salaries under the reclassification bill range $3,720, $4,020, $4,320, and $4,620.

We now come to the first and second assistants, and find from the table prepared by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] that they are placed under grade 2. I insist that the first and second assistants fit under grade 3 as set out in the reclassification act. Grade 3 is referred to in the reclassification act as passed as—an associate professional grade, including all classes of positions in the service the duties of which are to perform independently or with a small number of subordinates in the junior or assistant professional grade, or with other subordinates, responsible professional work requiring extended training and considerable successful previous experience.

These first assistants are compelled to act as principals in the absence of the principals; they have at all times to do highly professional and technical work, because one principal can not review all the work of the 8 or 10 assistants working under each principal. The volume of work in each division is such that the first assistants have to be left largely to themselves, so that—they perform duties independently or with a small number of subordinates in the junior or assistant professional grade.

The assistant examiners are all scientifically trained, and almost all of them are members of the bar and hold degrees. All of the examiners are compelled to pass examinations in higher mathematics, advanced physics and chemistry, in the application of science to all industrial arts, the reading of mechanical drawings, and in either French or German.

Under the Lampert bill the salaries provided range from $2,000 to $3,800, while under the reclassification bill, under grade 3, the salaries are $2,820, $3,000, $3,300, and $3,540.

A number of the second assistants would come under grade 3 and the remainder under grade 2.

We now come to the third assistants. Under the Lampert bill they range $1,920, $2,080, and $2,200, and would come under grade 2 of the reclassification bill, which provides:

Grade 2, referred to as the assistant professional grade, shall include all classes of positions in this service, the duties of which are to perform under general direction assigned professional work requiring professional training and previous experience, but not the exercise of independent judgment—and the salaries set out for this grade under the reclassification bill are $2,100, $2,280, 2,460, and $2,640.

The fourth assistants would come under grade 1, the salaries for which under the reclassification bill are $1,620, $1,740, $1,860, and $1,980, while the Lampert bill provides for this class of work the following salaries, $1,500, $1,650, and $1,800. This grade includes—all classes of positions in this service the duties of which are to perform under immediate supervision the simplest kinds of work requiring professional training.

I herewith submit a table comparing the salaries as set out in the Lampert bill with those provided for in the reclassification act as passed, and submit that all of them are within the range of those provided for in the reclassification bill. I do not contend that the salaries fixed in the Lampert bill are always the minimum salary of the grade under which each would be placed in the reclassification act, but that they do come within the range of salaries provided for, and in a great many instances the salaries in the Lampert bill are less than the minimum for the same grade fixed by the reclassification act as passed.

Salaries in the Patent Office.

	Present.	Lampert bill.	Reclassification bill as passed.
Commissioner	$5,000	$6,000	$5,400, $6,000, $6,600 (professional service, grade 6).
First Assistant Commissioner.	4,000	5,000	$4,850, $5,100, $5,460 (professional service, grade 5).
Second Assistant Commissioner.	3,500	5,000	$4,850, $5,100, $5,460 (professional service, grade 5).
Examiners in chief.	3,500	5,000	$4,850, $5,100, $5,460 (professional service, grade 5).
Solicitor or counsel.	2,750	5,000	$4,850, $5,100, $5,460 (professional service, grade 5).
Chief clerk	3,000	4,000	$3,720, $4,020, $4,320 (professional service, patent group, grade 4).
Law examiners	2,750	4,000	$3,720, $4,020, $4,320 (professional service, grade 4).
Principal examiners.	2,700	3,900	$3,720, $4,020, $4,320 (professional service, grade 4).
First Assistant examiners	2,400	2,900 3,100 3,300 3,500	$2,820, $3,000, $3,300, $3,540 (professional service, grade 3).
Second assistant examiners	2,100	2,350 2,500 2,800 3,000	$2,820, $3,000, $3,300, $3,540 (professional service, grade 3).
Third assistant examiners	1,800	1,920 2,080 2,200	$2,100, $2,280, $2,460, $2,640 (professional service, grade 2).
Fourth assistant examiners	1,600	1,500 1,650 1,800	$1,620, $1,740, $1,860, $1,980 (professional service, grade 1).

If we take the total of the salaries fixed in the Lampert bill for the officers and employees as set out in the foregoing table and compare it with the total salaries which would be allowed if the officers and employees so mentioned were given the minimum salary in the grades to which they would or should be allocated under the reclassification bill as passed, the total in the Lampert bill would exceed the total under the reclassification bill approximately $10,000.

The bill as a whole will increase the cost of the Patent Office $447,740, but it also provides for additional help and provides the means by which this additional expense shall be met—that is, by increasing the fees charged by the office in the transaction of its business. There would thereby be no additional burden placed upon the backs of the taxpayers generally, but the increased cost is borne by those who are interested in having their applications for patents, trade-marks, designs, and so forth, acted upon within a reasonable time and by persons competent and efficient to perform that work.

As has been stated many times, this bill is in the nature of an emergency bill, by which we hope to be able so to improve the conditions in the Patent Office that the thousands of men engaged in all sorts of enterprises affected by the conduct of the Patent Office may have relief, and to prevent further resignations of the best examiners in the office by providing compensation commensurate with the duties and responsibilities of their positions.

This legislation is constructive legislation. It seeks to make and keep efficient one of the most important bureaus of the Government, and to withhold from it the necessary funds and personnel to make it efficient and to keep it efficient is to break down one of the greatest agencies contributing to the prosperity of the country.

The American Valuation Plan of the Pending Tariff Legislation.

OF
HON. T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH, OF MARYLAND,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, January 18, 1922.

SPEECH DELIVERED BY T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH BEFORE THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, SALISBURY, MD., ON JANUARY 12, 1922.

On March 4, 1921, when the present majority party came into full power, an extraordinary condition of affairs, unprecedented in the history of the world, existed. The Great War, in which was involved almost the entire civilized world, was only just over. This country, with the full knowledge that its own future and that of civilization appeared to hang in the balance, had taken part in this war with every resource of its manhood and all its material resources. The mental and physical energies of our people had during the war, and particularly after we went into it ourselves, been strung to the highest pitch; the natural human reaction culminated in the general election of 1920, when the party in power was swept out by a veritable tidal wave of reaction, and the party now in power carried into control by such a majority as tended to further unsettle the already chaotic condition of public opinion.

The present dominant party, following the usual tactics of a minority seeking control, had promised a return of prosperity by legislation to every class of American society, and was, therefore, placed last spring in the extremely difficult position of being utterly unable to fulfill its campaign pledges. This is not a partisan statement, as we are not approaching the subject from a partisan standpoint, but of a condition which might very readily, to a greater or less degree—according to the trend of mind of the speaker—have applied had political conditions been reversed. Great and apparently unfettered power fostered intolerance, as it always does, and resulted in proposed legislation of the most unusual kind.

One measure I have reason particularly to remember. The Comptroller of the Currency, who had done everything in his power to prevent the too rapid deflation of 1920, and to whom credit is due more than to anyone else for the comparatively few failures among small banks serving communities outside of the great cities, had come into disfavor with the Wall Street tendencies. As you may know, the Federal Reserve Board practically controls the Federal reserve banks, while the Comptroller of the Currency has under his charge the member banks. On April 11 last, the very first day of the extra session of Congress, a bill was introduced, doing away with the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, and centering all of his duties and authority in the Federal Reserve Board, under which proposed legislation the five members of the Federal reserve board would virtually control not only the Federal reserve banks, but the member banks; that is, would dominate the entire financial fabric of America.

This proposed legislation was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, of which I am a member, and had the support of the President of the United States, the American Bankers' Association, the Federal Reserve Board, and various powerful business interests. Now, this legislation, centralizing financial control, as it proposed to do, would never have been suggested under normal conditions, but I am sure you would be surprised and interested to hear the story of the tact and diplomacy, and the tireless but quiet effort required to prevent this bill from being voted out by the Banking and Currency Committee with a favorable report.

When either of the great parties comes into full power tariff legislation is usually a first consideration. This was especially true last spring, because Congress felt the pressure not only of that part of the public, trained to believe in tariff legislation as a panacea for their financial ills, but of the great manufacturers who had been largely free from foreign competition during the war and wanted a continuation of that beneficence.

The American people, in spite of upset conditions, would have been shocked at any substantial raise in duties, so the expedient was devised of not raising the apparent duty measurably, but of changing the basis of the duty in a manner to make the actual duty in a great many instances practically prohibitive.

In all our previous tariff history duties have been assessed upon the price of the article where manufactured and when contracted for, which can, of course, be the only technical basis of a duty, which has come to mean a percentage of the cost price added to the cost of the imported article—in the conception of one party in a maximum amount to raise revenue and a minimum amount to increase the price to the consumer and of the other party in an amount based on the theory of not only raising revenue but enabling the American manufacturer to sell at a higher price than he could if subjected to foreign competition, the true theory of a tariff for revenue only being a tariff on articles of general consumption as distinguished from the protective idea of a tariff on particular articles ostensibly for the purpose of increasing American production.

Never, however, in the history of American tariff legislation has it ever before been suggested that a tariff should be so framed as to obscure its purpose and scope and result in a great many cases in making the duty on an article, instead of a proportion of its cost price, 100 per cent of its cost price and often a great deal more than 100 per cent of its cost price.

As a matter of fact in some of the so-called compound rates in the proposed tariff bill the duty is not only more than 100 per cent of the cost price but is more than 100 per cent on the American selling price, so that the article under no circumstances can be imported. For example, paragraph 354 of the tariff bill provides that penknives, and so forth, valued at more than 50 cents per dozen—which under the American valuation means valued at the American selling price at more than 50 cents per dozen—selling in this country, we will say, for 51 cents a dozen, are to be assessed 5 cents each, which is equivalent to 60 cents per dozen, and, in addition thereto, 30 per cent on the American selling price of 51 cents—that is, 15 cents—a total duty of 75 cents a dozen on a knife supposed to sell in this country for 51 cents a dozen.

Paragraph 365 provides that rifles valued at more than $5 apiece—that is, selling for, say, $5.01 apiece—are to be assessed $4 each, and in addition thereto 85 per cent on the American selling price of $5.01—that is, $1.73—a total duty of $5.73 on a rifle supposed to sell in America for $5.01.

Paragraph 368 provides that clocks valued at more than $1.10 each—that is, selling for, say, $1.11 each—are to be assessed 70 cents each, and in addition thereto 35 per cent on the American selling price of $1.11—that is, 38 cents—a total duty of $1.08 on a clock supposed to sell in America for $1.11.

The administrative difficulties of the so-called American valuation plan seem to be so great as to render the plan impracticable from that standpoint. The appraisers at the various ports of entry have now the affidavit of the exporter and importer, their own knowledge of the cost price of the imported article, based on continuous experience and more than 100 years of precedent and judicial decision. Under the proposed plan, a declared valuation would seem to be necessary, because no appraiser would be able from day to day to know the wholesale price of a given article throughout the United States, first, because the price varies somewhat; second, because the wholesale price varies according to locality; and, third, because there are probably half a million different articles subject to ad valorem duties under the proposed act. The other day I looked over, with a tariff expert, the Sears & Roebuck catalogue, and we estimated that in that one catalogue there were probably from 50 to 100 articles subject to specific duty and probably 100,000 articles which would be subject to the ad valorem duty, requiring the port appraiser to know the American wholesale price of each of the 100,000.

Now suppose, as a matter of absolute necessity, declared valuation was decided upon as an administrative policy; it is doubtful whether this valuation would be sustained by the courts, because if the official in charge of the administration of the act should list an article at a valuation higher than the actual American wholesale selling price the importer could very readily say—and I see no reason why he would not be justified in saying—that he could not be compelled to pay a percentage duty on a declared valuation when the law itself provided for an actual valuation.

Leaving the administration features, the advocates of this plan say that under it the duties on articles from different countries exporting to the United States will be equalized, giving them, therefore, an equal opportunity to sell in this country. To illustrate: Under the present plan, with an ad valorem duty of 40 per cent, an article costing $2, if imported from England, would be subject to a duty of 80 cents, making the total cost of the imported article $2.80. If the cost of the same article in Germany were $1.50, 60 cents duty would be added, making the cost to the importer from Germany $2.10. Under the proposed American valuation plan, if the selling price of this same article, costing in England $2 and in Germany $1.50, was $3 in the United States, a duty of $1.20 would be placed on both the English article and the German article, making the English article cost the importer $3.20 and the German article $2.70.

It is, of course, readily seen that the American valuation brings the cost of the English and German article closer together than is done by the present law, but there is still a difference of 50 cents, which would tend to favor the German article in the American market, though to a somewhat less degree. However this may be, is there any theoretical or practical economist since the beginning of the world who would require this Government to act as a commercial wet nurse between two foreign countries, each seeking a favored place at the breast of the American people?

The advocates of this new plan of valuation for purposes of duty contend also that foreign money is so far depreciated in value as to make the foreign article so cheap that the duty based on the cost price would be comparatively negligible, while the cost of the imported article would be so cheap as to drive American production out of the market. As a matter of fact, foreign inflation has caused a rise in price in foreign countries much higher than enough to compensate for exchange depreciation. From no less an authority than Prof. Irving Fisher we find that the average price level in France is two and one-half times higher than in 1913; the average Italian price level four times higher than in 1913; the German price level seventeen times higher; the Austrian, one hundred times; the Russian, one thousand times.

Many dutiable articles, as a matter of fact, have increased in price far above the just-mentioned average, as is illustrated by the following table which I am inserting, but only a part of which I will read. This table shows not only the difference in cost in foreign money but also in American money after allowing for the difference in exchange:

Recently the New York University Bureau of Business Research sent a questionnaire to the leading economists of the United States. Over 300 questionnaires were sent out. Of this number, 71 brought replies, representing 23 States. Among those who replied were the following recognized leaders of economic thought:

E. E. Agger (Columbia); Roy G. Blakey (Minnesota); E. L. Bogart (Illinois); T. N. Carver (Harvard); R. E. Chaddock (Columbia); Clive Day (Yale); C. W. Doten (Massachusetts Institute of Technology); C. A. Ellwood (Missouri); E. F. Gay (New York); G. D. Hancock (Washington and Lee); B. H. Hibbard (Wisconsin); J. W. Jenks (New York University); W. I. King (New York); H. A. Mills (Chicago); W. A. Persons (Harvard); J. A. Ryan (Catholic University of America); C. O. Ruggles (Ohio); E. W. Taussig (Harvard); G. O. Virtue (Nebraska); M. S. Wildman (California); C. W. Wright (Chicago).

The inquiry involved the following questions:

1. Will the American valuation plan decrease imports?
2. Will the American valuation plan decrease exports?
3. Will the American valuation plan decrease revenue?
4. Will the American valuation plan increase depression?
5. Will the American valuation plan increase unemployment?
6. Will the American valuation plan increase the cost of living?
7. Will the American valuation plan make the administration of the tariff law more difficult?
8. Will the American valuation plan increase uncertainty?

The answers showed the following astounding result:

1. Decrease imports: Yes, 69; no, 1.
2. Decrease exports: Yes, 68; no, 1.
3. Decrease revenue: Yes, 46; no, 1.
4. Increase depression: Yes, 58; no, 1.
5. Increase unemployment: Yes, 54; no, 2.
6. Increase cost of living: Yes, 67; no, 4.
7. More difficult administration: Yes, 68; no, 1.
8. Increase uncertainty: Yes, 56; no, 4.

showing the overwhelming considered opinion of leaders of thought throughout the country, with each opinion formed without relation to any other opinion.

For several months past, a feeling of restrained impatience with the measure has been developing among those high up in the councils of the majority party. On September 6, 1921, at Cleveland, Postmaster General Hays spoke as follows:

To thoughtful men there must be approval of a certain hesitation and disposition to be cautious and a determination to be sure-footed in the consideration of this subject. If I were to attempt to express a summing up of the present state of mind of Congress and thoughtful men about the tariff, it would seem to me that it amounts to a feeling that the present year is not a good one in which to write a permanent tariff bill to last for many years to come. Conditions throughout the world are too chaotic to be able to foretell exactly what is needed. The very basic condition on which a tariff is built—namely, the cost of manufacturing in various European countries with relation to our own cost of manufacture, and the value of the currency of the various European countries with relation to the value of our own currency—is at the present moment as fluctuating as quicksand and as unforeseeable in the future as the weather.

A dependable tariff built upon such a foundation is difficult, of course. It has been thought by many that we would overcome these handicaps by a device which we called American valuation, and which provided that all customs duties should be estimated upon the value of goods at the time when they arrive in the United States and in terms of American money. Looking carefully into this, it has been thought that this device might not overcome the handicap, and, further, might have a boomerang effect on our own interests. The end of it has been that we have appropriated $100,000 to investigate this device and otherwise determine what might be done to help us toward writing a permanent tariff. These conditions of fluctuation and instability which make the writing of a permanent tariff so difficult at the moment may in some measure be relieved after the Disarmament Conference has taken place and we have accomplished steps which the President has in mind for the adjustment of our international relations.

On December 6 last, in the course of his address to the Congress, the President of the United States said:

There is a manifest difference of opinion about the merits of American valuation. Many nations have adopted delivery valuation as the basis for collecting duties; that is, they take the cost of the imports delivered at the port of entry as the basis for levying duty. It is no radical departure, in view of varying conditions and the disordered state of money values, to provide for American valuation, but there can not be ignored the danger of such valuation, brought to the level of our own production costs, making our tariffs prohibitive. It might do so in many instances where imports ought to be encouraged. I believe Congress ought well consider the desirability of the only promising alternative, namely, a provision authorizing proclaimed American valuation, under prescribed conditions, on any given list of articles imported.

In this proposed flexibility authorizing increases to meet conditions so likely to change, there should also be provisions for decreases. A rate may be just to-day and entirely out of proportion six months from to-day. If our tariffs are to be made equitable and not necessarily burden our imports and hinder our trade abroad, frequent adjustment will be necessary for years to come. Knowing the impossibility of modification by act of Congress for any one or a score of lines without involving a long array of schedules, I think we shall go a long ways toward stabilization if there is recognition of the Tariff Commission's fitness to recommend urgent changes by proclamation.

Whatever may be our opinion as to the wisdom of the President's suggestions, there can hardly be any doubt that his statement indicates a conclusion on his part that the American valuation program as embodied in the tariff measure which last July passed the House of Representatives and is now before the Finance Committee of the Senate for consideration would, if enacted into law, be legislation inimical to the best interests of the American people as a whole.

Aside from other considerations, it may be that the American valuation plan was intended to put every obstacle in the way of foreign imports, for the valuation made the basis of duty is the American value at the time of the import, and not when the foreign purchase is made some 6 or 12 months before. As the importer, when he buys his goods, can not tell what their market price or the market price of similar goods will be in America months later, he can not tell what will be the cost of the purchased goods, including the duty, and hence will deem it unsafe to buy at all.

I will not discuss the appraiser's difficulty of deciding what are similar goods. The difficulty is apparent, and serves to further illustrate the possibly deliberate attempt to formulate an unworkable law to make importing in any event as difficult as possible.

My friends, could any policy be more mistaken? We are a creditor nation. Europe can pay us with her goods. We have great surpluses of corn and wheat and cotton. Europe can buy them with her goods. We can not sell if we do not buy, and international trade can be carried on only by an exchange of goods and commodities.

International barter will go a long way toward stabilizing the purchasing power of money, which is absolutely necessary to stimulate to business activity constructive ability and conservative capital.

In conclusion, if the purport of this measure had been known to the American people last June, it would never have passed the House of Representatives last July; if its purport were known to them now, it would never be favorably reported out of the Finance Committee of the Senate of the United States.

The Antilynching Bill.

OF
HON. RALPH GILBERT,
OF KENTUCKY,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Wednesday, January 18, 1922.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a bidden, though an obvious, effort to conciliate a group of political disturbers and contains all the dangers incident to such legislation. This group, though small, is active and vindictive and is demanding this legislation from the Republican Party as a veiled threat to the Southland. It seems more like an expression of "carpet-bag" days than of to-day, and is brought forward at this time by reason of the great service rendered to the Republican Party by the Negroes in the recent elections.

Recently in Louisville, Ky., the metropolis of my State, a Republican was elected mayor, though he received 20,000 fewer white votes than his Democratic opponent. My State is now under Republican rule, and yet the Democratic candidate for governor in the last gubernatorial election received 40,000 more white votes than this Republican governor. In Kentucky, therefore, the Negro voter now dictates its governmental policies and selects its officers. Is the race question a live, pending question there? This, however, we hope will not occur again, for our legislature is in session and will pass such laws, conforming to the views of the Supreme Court of the United States, as are necessary to restore the Government of our State to its white voters. There we pay the taxes, and there we intend to rule.

The race question is always approached with reluctance. Its discussion is irritating. It is thrust upon us at this time at the demand of race agitators, and I for one feel that it is time to threw aside our indifference and face the facts as they are. The belief is that politics is back of this measure, and I say meet that situation unflinchingly, and our party has nothing to fear in taking a firm, honest, and intelligent position. We have avoided already too long this issue, whispering to ourselves that it was not really impending, until we find ourselves face to face with a most embarrassing situation.

Here in the Capital of our country Negroes attend the official receptions and social functions. We find every bureau and every department of public service filled with them. They occupy positions of importance, frequently positions of authority over white men and women, wherein we must come in contact on terms of more or less intimacy in the discharge of our public duties. Many of our assistants, secretaries, and helpers are women, and in order for them to perform their services to us it is necessary for them to come into the closest contact with the Negroes holding these important departmental positions. My people would be surprised to learn that Negroes served as jurors wherein the rights of white people are litigated; they would hardly believe that they are judges on the bench itself.

The situation is so prevalent that we here become calloused to its existence and careless to its consequences. The discussion of this bill may render a greater service than we contemplate in focusing attention on this subject which at some time, not far distant, must be solved. Dislike it as we may, evade it if we will, this race question is the biggest, the liviest, and most serious question now confronting the people, and unless it is honestly met, intelligently considered, and wisely solved friction, race hatred, and bloodshed must inevitably result.

The Republican Party may have what political advantage it can derive from pampering to these Negro-race agitators of the North; but I am glad to remember that recently we enfranchised many millions of women voters who will be found almost unanimously against extending this tendency to race intermingling. Even as a partisan, I would not shirk the issue. Stand firm and let it be known north, east, south, and west, for the feeling at heart is the same in every quarter of our land, that we are the white-man's party and that the Republican Party is helpless by reason of political obligations to offer a disinterested solution. Although we may profit by its injection, yet politics should not enter into this settlement. The future peace and happiness of our country depend upon its wise settlement. The very lives of many of its citizens are at stake, and he who would decide this great question which hangs above us like a black cloud from the standpoint of political expediency alone is a traitor to his country.

I think the South and the North should leave to the West the solution of its Japanese question, because they understand it. We do not. We should trust them to arrive at the best solution and let them know that their conclusion is ours, and likewise the West and North should leave to the South the solution of its Negro question, all white people agreeing that whatever is to the best interest of the white race in that locality is paramount.

Not that we want to harm or mistreat the Negro or prejudice him in any right. On the contrary, we know we understand him better, treat him better, and protect him better in the South, where we control him and expect to continue to control him, than they do who do not understand him and who seek always to misguide him in instilling in him false hopes of unattainable positions rather than giving him substantial, wholesome advantages.

Do not picture me as an enemy to him; I am his friend. You will pardon a personal reference. A worthy colored family lives in my yard; has done so for many years. I furnish them a warm house, water, fuel, light, garden, and a cow all free, and feed the cow, too, for the enormous consideration that they look at my house and see that it continues to stand while I am away. None of his so-called northern friends would do that for him. One reason why so many of us southerners are poor is because we support so many Negroes.

As a race we understand them and live in perfect harmony with the good ones, but among so many Negroes there are, of course, some that are mean and vicious, and these must be held in submission, and herein lies the difference between treatment accorded the Negro in the South and in the North. We punish him for crimes he commits. You punish him because he is a Negro. We pick out the guilty individual. You persecute the race. Lynchings in the South are of the individual, sometimes two or three, but always of those directly or indirectly connected with the crime, while the lynchings in the North are of many Negroes whose connection with the crime is of no concern. In East St. Louis, Omaha, and Chicago recently hundreds of Negroes were lynched at a time; there was no effort to discriminate between the guilty and the innocent. The fact that they were innocent or that they were women or children was of no avail. No other reason was sought than that their skins were black, and yet you continually pose as their friends.

The Negro was brought not many generations back from Africa, beast almost, from the jungles, and all the advancement from savagery they have attained has been from contact, help, and sacrifice of southern people. Madison Grant, in his recent work on ethnology, "The Passing of the Great Race," maintains that the progress of any people is prescribed by the capacities of that race, and yet some governmental theorists insist that these descendants of recent savages of the lowest division of mankind should or could appreciate the same advantages that those people enjoy who have for untold ages been the world's most advanced people and who represent the highest division of mankind.

We are willing that all the freedom of government be theirs, that they advance in civilization fully sustained in all their rights; but we are not equals, were not made equals, and we do not intend to associate or live as equals. We are willing that they should have as good schools as we, but not the same schools; that they ride in as good railroad coaches, but not the same coaches.

The forcing of these things which tend to social equality will in the end result only in race hatred and race riots, and any man who insists on them is either misguided or an enemy to the people he pretends to befriend. When the President of the United States proclaimed in a southern city that while he was not for social equality he was for political equality, he commits a dangerous folly that naturally called forth a protest, for it is but a step, a short step, from one to the other.

I am in favor of a strict compliance with the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which guarantees to any citizen the equal protection of the laws. That Constitution and its every amendment should be reverently obeyed. But there is a wide distinction between protection of citizens by law and conferring honors upon them from choice.

The party that continues to fill positions of government with Negroes, where we have to come in contact with them as equals and often as our superiors in the discharge of our duties, can not take refuge in such chimerical distinctions. We see the effect here in Washington, where Negroes have so much political equality that they assume social equality with a few and social superiority over the rest.

The folly of making a Negro a judge, which you have done here in Washington, and then saying he is not socially equal with the white persons who are forced to call him "Your honor" and whom he has the authority to punish is apparent. No; there is no honesty nor sincerity in your position and no such distinction can stand practical application. I am opposed to Negroes holding any office, where, by reason of contact, they might be led to hope for political or social equality. I will not indulge in the insincerity which I am condemning in others and will say frankly I am opposed to Negroes holding any office of any kind.

Bearing in mind these truths, what will be the real effect of this bill? Section 5 provides that the county wherein a lynching occurs forfeits $10,000 to the family of the deceased. It not only frequently happens, but is generally the case, that the entire family of a bad and vicious Negro is also bad and vicious. Let us suppose that a very revolting crime is committed and an indignant neighborhood takes summary action, which will occur anywhere, because it is true that there is one right that men will not leave to be settled in the courts. It is a spark left from the fire of the cave man that ages of civilization has not put out. That right which men reserve to themselves and surrender to no tribunal is the right to protect their women. Let us picture these neighbors taxed to raise $10,000 to pay to the family of the brute, a family who probably aided in the crime, and then picture this family with $10,000 riding gloatingly in an automobile, the first thing a Negro would buy, past the people whom they have outraged, and what will be the inevitable result? Race riots, bloodshed, hatred of the Government which permits it, greater lawlessness, and bolshevism.

Section 6 makes a county through which a mob passes liable for this $10,000 forfeit, although it may not have a citizen in the mob, nor perhaps a single officer who had any knowledge of the existence of the mob or even knowledge of the commission of the crime. The lawless persons engaged in the mob will never be known and will be unaffected by any tax, while law-abiding, responsible people at home in bed will be compelled to pay a forfeit of $10,000.

Section 3 destroys the sovereignty of the States and makes them vassal States to the Federal Government. Under it the tenure of all its officers is subject to the opinion of the Federal court. The governor himself may be dragged from the State capital by the order of any Federal district judge, and if, in the opinion of that tribunal he has been remiss in his duties in protecting some rapist, perhaps, then his term of office comes to an end. He is sent to prison for five years and fined $5,000, and the State that elected him has no voice whatever in his guilt or innocence, or whether he shall serve them or languish in some Federal prison.

The Federal Government has only such powers as have been delegated to it by the Constitution of the United States. No congressional enactment can confer any additional power and the States in all other powers are yet supreme. The bill is palpably unconstitutional. It shows to what lengths some would dare to go, of what intolerance an overwhelming majority may be guilty. It is not only contrary to the letter of the Constitution but subversive to the ideas upon which our Government is founded.

Our dual form of government, each supreme in its particular sphere, with its checks and balances, has been pronounced by students and statesmen of the world as the most perfect work of men. This bill destroys to the extent it applies those principles which form its foundation and which alone make the superstructure possible.

If it were constitutional, its effect would be to inculcate those views which its authors claim to want to destroy. The lyncher reasons that the law throws too much protection around the accused, deliberates too long, and he is justified in defying the law. The advocates of this bill reason that the law, the Constitution, gives the States too much power, that the States are too slow to punish the mob, and they are justified in defying the law and the Constitution.

This bill would create acute friction between the State and the Federal Government; bring the latter into contempt, encourage the vicious to crime, cause race riots, bloodshed, and anarchy. The bill is unconstitutional and indefensible.

OF
HON. CHARLES L. UNDERHILL, OF MASSACHUSETTS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, January 20, 1922.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Spenker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include an article in reference to the Victory Memorial, as follows:

Publication to-day of a letter addressed by President Harding to the governors of the several States urging their support for the "National Victory Memorial Building," projected by Mrs. Henry F. Dimock and her George Washington Memorial Association, revealed that the President was misled concerning the enterprise.

"I am writing you to enlist your interest with mine in the Washington and Victory Memorial Building, which is in course of erection in Washington," wrote the President in part.

SITE COVERED WITH DEBRIS.

The President was not correctly informed. The building is not "in course of erection," because the association has no authority to build; its authority is entirely dependent on a bill now before the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The site is practically covered with debris. Many, like the President, have supposed that the building was in course of erection, owing to the publicity resulting from the laying of the corner stone in November of last year. The cornerstone exercises were held in the National Museum; they were held without legal authority.

Many Members are just beginning to realize that this much-advertised proposition still is in the air. Some had thought from the publicity in connection with it that construction of this building actually had begun. The promoters evidently have done nothing to spread the information that the association can not build without action by Congress, and that there even is question whether the association still has legal title to the site given it by Congress in 1913 under certain conditions. One of these was that the construction should begin in two years, and although this time was several times extended time expired finally in March, 1920. The association to-day, therefore, is without any authority to build. Apparently there has been an attempt to have nothing said about the situation.

Let's look into it. Here is a building which will cost $10,000,000. In previous legislation concerning it there has been the stipulation that it must be able to show at least $500,000 in its treasury before work could begin. The alarm of the promoters over the recommendation of the War Department that it must have at least $1,000,000 in its treasury before it lets a building contract creates a suspicion that the association feels this would be impossible and adds substance to the ugly report that the promoters hope that once the work is begun, Congress can be persuaded to finish it or will have to because of their inability to do so.

RICH HARVEST FOR SOME ONE.

Somebody is reaping a ripe harvest of dollars from this thing.

The association campaign literature asserts that nearly $1,000,000 has been raised by popular subscription. Then why the fear at the suggestion to make it show that amount in cash in its treasury before giving new authority to build? My recollection is that this campaign for funds to build this altogether unnecessary building has been going on for at least 10 years. All of us know how money for this sort of thing is collected. It is usually on a 50-50 commission basis. This association probably had to collect $2,000,000 or more to get nearly $1,000,000. Who got the commissions? Who are receiving salaries? What are the expenses? If it took about 10 years to produce about $1,000,000 in the treasury, when on earth will this $10,000,000 affair be finished?

I am against the proposition from first to last. First, it was to be a memorial to George Washington, a sort of rival to Mt. Vernon, as if that wonderful spot were not enough in itself, although we have the Washington Monument and the city of Washington in addition. Then the war gave the promoters a chance to call it a national memorial building. The National Fine Arts Commission and the American Legion oppose it as such.

But this gives the promoters opportunity to launch a new and very ingenious method of obtaining funds. There will be a service star somewhere on the walls and ceiling of the great dome of the building for every person who served with our colors in the World War, blue for the living and gold for the dead. Subscriptions are being sought on the basis of $5 for each blue and $100 for each gold star, and already there is a campaign to induce States and cities and towns to make "service-star" appropriations for the building. These appropriations, of course, would serve to establish a precedent for an appropriation by Congress.

WOULD PRODUCE $20,000,000.

There were more than 4,000,000 with the colors; so that if only $5 is collected for each the promoters will have about $20,000,000. Probably they figure they will have to have that much collected to get a yield of about $10,000,000; but mark my word, if we confer authority upon them they will be around to us next with a plea for public funds.

The more the exact status of the proposition is being realized in the House the greater grows the opposition, and there is now a number of Republicans who feel that it is time to call a halt of the whole proposition.

There is a very reasonable proposition before the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to amend this bill giving authority to build so that the Secretary of War would have to be satisfied that sufficient funds were on hand to warrant building before giving consent to construction.

The building, as I understand it, will be erected in three stages, first the central part and then two wings. This amendment now being discussed in the committee would give the Secretary of War full and necessary powers of supervision, but Mrs. Dimock and her friends strenuously oppose this. Why?

Frankly, I don't like this or similar propositions.

And I submit an editorial from the Boston (Mass.) Herald of Monday, January 16, 1922, and ask that the same be printed:

TWO GREAT MISTAKES.

Our own legislature and those of the 47 other States in the Union will soon be asked to make an appropriation toward the "National Victory Memorial Building" in Washington, engineered by Mrs. Henry F. Dimock, through an organization known as the George Washington Memorial Association. An indorsement of the project from no less a person than President Harding, whose letter we printed in full in yesterday's paper, complicates the situation. It is fair to assume that this letter was prepared by a press agent or promoter for his signature. If so, Secretary Christian should have prevented the President of the United States from testifying so widely at variance with the facts.

This letter, whatever its origin, speaks of this building as "in course of erection." If that is so, it is being built on land to which the association holds no title. For a bill is now before Congress to give public land for this purpose and that bill has not been passed. The land intended is now covered with debris, and was even in an unfit condition for the "laying of the corner stone" exercises in November. These were held in the National Museum and were without legal authority.

The President's letter further declares that the edifice is "to represent a compliance with the wish of Gen. Washington, that a great educational establishment should be provided here." George Washington, to be sure, made provision in his will for the establishment of a national university; something which Congress has failed to carry out. But this is not a national university, any more than would be Tremont Temple or Horticultural Hall. Mrs. Dimock's project contemplates a series of auditoriums or halls for public lectures and meetings. Incidentally it would carry a long roster of janitors, doormen, supernumeraries, etc., at the eventual expense of the Federal Government. But that does not make it a university. It is not in compliance with the wish of George Washington in any remote way whatever.

The first the Herald ever heard of this project—and we were entirely open-minded about it—came from the Boston newspapers in a report that the towns and cities of Massachusetts had been assessed certain sums as their quotas. It was then a George Washington memorial. Mrs. Dimock had not even thought of the national victory idea. We wondered by what authority the towns were being assessed. We saw the different amounts published, and learned that articles were being put in the warrants for the various town meetings to see if they would appropriate their respective quotas. The propaganda gave the impression that it was a Federal charge which the towns should meet.

The Cape Cod towns, holding their meetings early, began to make the appropriations. A reporter sent to the Cape found material evidence that these voters supposed it was something the town had to pay. We asked Mrs. Dimock to return that money. She has never done so. She has changed the name of the project and the nature of the appeal. It is now on a basis of $5 for each soldier in the war and $100 for each gold star. These sums she asks the several States to appropriate.

We hear every few days of new objects for which the building is to provide quarters and accommodations. There is one we should like to nominate, and that is a reservation for Mrs. Howe's bank.

OF
HON. LADISLAS LAZARO, OF LOUISIANA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, January 20, 1922.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker, I ask to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an editorial from the Seaman, of January, 1922, praising Mr. Hoover for issuing instructions to enforce the language test provisions of the seaman's act in an effective manner, beginning January 12, 1922.

This is a wise provision of the seaman's act, enacted in 1915, and will no doubt help not only to make life at sea safe but help to build up our American merchant marine.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Seaman, January, 1922.]

LANGUAGE TEST ENFORCEMENT.

Every well-informed supporter of the American merchant marine will find cause for deep gratification in the announcement that Secretary of Commerce Hoover has issued instructions to enforce the language-test provisions of the seamen's act in an effective manner, beginning January 12, 1922. The law applies equally to all vessels leaving American ports regardless of the flags such vessels may be sailing under, and provides that 75 per cent of the crew in each department of such vessels must be able to understand the orders of the officers. It is a regulation that is not only essential to safety of life at sea, but is also necessary to insure a fair chance to American ships in competition with foreign vessels.

If Secretary Hoover's instructions are properly carried out it will no longer be possible for the shipowners of foreign nations to disregard safety of life at sea and to operate with cheaper crews that are available to American vessels by employing cheap Asiatic laborers to whom the orders of the officers can be made intelligible only through the use of interpreters. A British or German vessel arriving at an American port after January 12 manned by an Asiatic crew, the members of which are unable to understand the orders of the British or German officers, will be compelled to discharge the Asiatics, make provision for returning them to their home ports, and to ship a new crew of seamen who are able to understand the language of the officers. In other words, such vessels will be compelled to meet the same general standards as must be observed by American vessels and the result will be a fair equalization in the cost of operation and will give to the American ships an equal opportunity which is their right.

The law and the regulations for its enforcement which have now been issued by Secretary Hoover are thoroughly practical and beneficial to the merchant marines of all nations in that the compelling tendency will be toward nationalizing the personnel of each merchant marine in accord with the flag under which the vessels operate. It is true that the number of Chinese seamen will be reduced, but that is because China has no merchant marine of her own. The apparent willingness of certain Asiatic nations to supply cheap labor to other nations is particularly menacing in the sea trade. Ships, like all other tools or appliances, eventually become the property of those who know how to operate them. If the Caucasian seamen are driven from their own ships by Asiatic seamen the Asiatic nations will eventually own the ships, and thus become possessed of the sea power of the world. The enforcement of the seamen's act on all vessels leaving ports of the United States and the enactment of a similar law by other maritime nations of the world will insure to each nation its proper and rightful share of the sea trade, and thus of the sea power.

"TO-MORROW IS ALSO A DAY."

The motto of the International Seamen's Union of America, "To-morrow is also a day," is not a mere catch phrase of sentimental words. It is a guide to definite and persistent action and means that though we may fail to-day we shall succeed to-morrow. It is now more than a quarter of a century since the International Seamen's Union of America began its efforts to revise the maritime laws of the United States in such manner as to restore freedom to the seamen and equality of opportunity to the merchant marine. At each failure the members who possessed the courage and stamina to continue the struggle pointed to the motto "To-morrow is also a day" and went on with the fight. Success was the reward of their persistency when the law was enacted by Congress in 1915. One year later, under the terms of the act, the law became applicable to foreign vessels in American harbors. Five years then elapsed before the Government could be persuaded to enforce its language regulations, but to the organized seamen failure means only cause for greater effort, and they tried again and again and again.

Eventually they succeeded and now the new instructions of the Department of Commerce offer another very positive proof that the slogan "To-morrow is also a day" leads to success.

Thus we shall continue until the seamen's act is made fully effective, and thus we shall strive until every maritime nation under the sun shall learn the necessity for similar legislation.

HON. BURTON E. SWEET,
OF IOWA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, January 20, 1922.

Mr. SWEET. Mr. Speaker, the demobilization of an army of over 4,000,000 men is as great a question as the mobilization and organization of that army.

The restoration of our country following a mighty war, the return of men to the avocations of peace, the binding up of the Nation's wounds, the proper care of the orphans and widows of those who bore the brunt of battle, the care and treatment of those who are maimed and who are suffering from diseases and ailments that were contracted while in the service, the proper hospitalization of the Nation's wards, the rehabilitation of men and fitting them as far as it is possible to take part again in the ordinary affairs of life, the restoration of the impaired intellects of men and bringing them back to themselves and to their relatives and friends, the banishment of the phantoms of the mind, the inoculation of love of country and a genuine desire to maintain the established Government and respect for the orderly procedure of the courts—these are some of the things to be accomplished.

It is important that every citizen should understand clearly his relations to his Government, notwithstanding the horrors of war and the uncertainties and difficulties to be encountered during the years following the war. Let those who took part in the great struggle know that we, as a free and liberty-loving people, are proud of the services that they rendered and that it is our desire not only to honor them but to treat them, in so far as it may be possible, with exact justice.

We want them to realize that this is the best Government on earth. We want them through all the years to come to stand for law and order and the ideals of the great Republic. In short, that they will be at all times in heart and mind for the Republic and not against it.

I believe that I can state without fear of successful contradiction that the United States Government thus far has handled the question of the disabled ex-service men in a broad, comprehensive, and humanitarian way.

No other Government engaged in the World War has equaled the United States, during the war or since, in the enactment of legislation for the benefit of the disabled ex-service men and their dependents. But this does not mean that we have done our full duty.

Europe is on the verge of bankruptcy. The credit of our Nation is practically unimpaired.

Money can not compensate them for the sacrifices they made, the hardships they endured, and the dangers they encountered. Money can not restore an arm, an eye, or a leg; but we can do our best to make the lives of these men as comfortable and happy as possible.

In view of the many things that have been said, either truthfully or untruthfully, relative to what the Nation has been doing for the benefit of ex-service men, it might be well to review briefly the legislation that has been enacted by Congress, during the war and since the war, in the interests of those who participated in that great conflict.

On October 6, 1917, Congress enacted the war risk insurance act. This should be known as the Rayburn Act. The law is divided into four parts: Title I relates to the organization of the bureau; Title II relates to allotments and family allowances; Title III relates to compensation to be paid in case of death or disability; Title IV relates to insurance payable in case of death or total disability.

The objects and purposes of the act were to take care of the families of the soldiers, sailors, and marines, their wives and children, and those who were dependent upon them while they were fighting the battles of the Republic. It was war legislation. This is the first time in the history of the Nation that legislation of this character has been enacted prior to the close of a war. Our pension legislation has usually been enacted after the war.

Under this act during the war the United States Government paid in allotments and family allowances about the sum of $572,262,333.59 to approximately 2,135,465 persons, the dependents of those who were engaged in fighting the Nation's battles; $276,011,027 of this sum was family allowances and paid directly out of the United States Treasury; $296,251,306.59 was allotted out of the pay of the soldiers and distributed by the United States Government. Under this law approximately forty billions of insurance were written for the benefit of the soldiers and their dependents. Those engaged in the war, and their dependents, had the benefit of this protection at peace-time rates, and the Government assumed the expense of administration and the excess mortality and disability cost resulting from the hazards of war. To be sure, when the Army was demobilized 75 per cent of those who had war-time insurance allowed their policies to lapse; but it must be remembered that while they were a part of the Military Establishment of the Government they and their dependents had the benefit of such insurance protection at peace-time rates. At the present time, as a result of this legislation, the Government owes for insurance claims pending $1,190,996,727.63, the payment of which extends over a period of nearly 20 years. Insurance now in force amounts to over three billion.

The question that immediately confronted Congress and the country after the war was over was how to meet the immediate demands and needs of the disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines and their dependents. It became necessary to amend the compensation features of the original war risk insurance act to meet existing conditions—first, as to the condition of the disabled soldiers as measured by their earning capacity in civil occupations, and second, to meet the increased cost of living.

Owing to the experience that the Government has had in connection with pension legislation it was believed best to handle the compensation question by general legislation rather than special legislation. It became necessary to institute a plan whereby all questions of disability as a result of war service should be justly rated and compensation paid commensurate with the actual disability incurred.

It was necessary to liberalize the insurance features of the law and make it more attractive if we were to continue this policy. The organization and management of the bureau had to be made more efficient.

To meet this situation a bill was passed by Congress on December 24, 1919, which was commonly known as the first Sweet bill. Under the provisions of this law a plan was devised for rating compensation claims in a broad and comprehensive way. All compensation claims now come under one of four heads:

First. Total and permanent.
Second. Partial and permanent.
Third. Total and temporary.
Fourth. Partial and temporary.

The whole responsibility of justly rating every disabled ex-service man is placed upon the bureau. Under the original act a soldier rated as total and temporary, and who had no dependents, received $30 per month. Under this act it was increased to $80 per month. Other ratings based thereon were increased proportionately in case there were dependents.

The compensation features of the law were also made retroactive, and as a consequence within the short space of 100 days after its passage $31,000,000 were paid to the disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines of this country.

The insurance features of the law were liberalized and made more workable.

The bill also made provision for furnishing to the disabled ex-service men reasonable governmental medical, surgical, and hospital services, and supplies, artificial limbs, trusses, and similar appliances as the director of the bureau may determine.

This measure had the support of the American Legion and Private Soldiers' and Sailors' Legion, and other soldier organizations throughout the country.

It might be observed in passing that President Wilson signed this bill on Christmas Eve, 1919, and it was frequently referred to in the columns of the press as one of the greatest Christmas presents ever made in the history of the world.

On March 3, 1921, in furtherance of the hospitalization plan, for the purpose of giving the disabled soldiers proper care and treatment, Congress passed what was known as the Langley bill appropriating $18,600,000—$12,500,000 for the construction of hospitals and $6,100,000 to be used in remodeling or extending existing plants.

In the sundry civil bill which passed Congress on June 5, 1920, the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers were made accessible to the wounded or disabled veterans of the World War, and appropriations were made by Congress for the purpose of making the act effective. About 4,000 of the veterans of the World War are being taken care of in these homes at this time.

On June 27, 1918, Congress passed what was known as the Fess bill, to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States. Under the terms of this act the disabled ex-service men of the World War receive vocational training. During the time that they are taking vocational training the Fess bill provides that each person shall receive $80 per month.

On July 11, 1919, Congress passed what was known as the "Darrow bill," which provides that every person pursuing a course of vocational training (except as provided in section 3 of the Fess Act) shall receive $80 per month for a single man without dependents, or for a man with dependents $100 per month, plus the several sums prescribed as family allowances. In other words, every person taking vocational training (except as provided in sec. 3 of the Fess Act) receives at least $80 per month, and if he has dependents he may receive as much as $132.50 per month, provided that he has a wife and two children, with $5 per month for each additional child. In other words, while the soldier is getting vocational training free he is paid $80 per month and his family is being liberally assisted by the Government.

On August 9, 1921, Congress passed what was commonly known as the second "Sweet bill." This bill provides for the establishment of a United States Veterans' Bureau. The general purpose of the act was to cure, if possible, the delinquencies in the administration of former laws passed by Congress so that the ex-service men would speedily receive the benefits to which Congress and the country believe they are justly entitled.

All the important witnesses who came before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, when we were considering the bill for the establishment of the United States Veterans' Bureau, without hesitation stated that they had no criticism of Congress or its Members for the legislation that had been passed. Their criticism went to the administration of the laws passed by Congress. Their criticism was of the agencies which were furnishing the service to the disabled veterans of the World War.

If an ex-service man desired information in regard to compensation or insurance he wrote to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance; if he desired information in regard to hospitalization, he wrote to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and his case was turned over to the Public Health Service; if he desired information in regard to vocational training, he wrote to the Director of the Rehabilitation Division of the Federal Board for Vocational Education. This condition of affairs led to great confusion and interminable delay. In many instances the ex-service man did not know just what agency of the Government to communicate with in order that he might have his case carefully and expeditiously handled. If an ex-service man complained about delays in the handling of his compensation claim, or that he had not received a receipt showing payment of his premium upon his insurance policy, or that he was not being properly hospitalized, or that his training was not satisfactory, there was a tendency to place the blame or cause for delay upon some division or agency of the Government other than the one receiving the complaint. In other words, the ex-service man in case of hospitalization, we will say, made application to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and if he complained of delay there was a tendency to blame the Public Health Service, and vice versa. If an ex-service man made application for vocational training and his case was not expeditiously handled and complaint was made there was a tendency to blame the Bureau of War Risk Insurance for delay in rating the applicant. It was a question of "passing the buck."

In order to remedy this situation it was thought best that the governmental agencies established for the benefit of the disabled ex-service men of the world War should be consolidated, and that the service to be rendered should be unified and brought under the control of one bureau.

It is a well-known fact that every business organization is largely dependent upon its management for success. In fact, it has been said that 95 per cent of the success of a business enterprise is founded upon management. The form of government of every successful business concern is a monarchy, in which practically all power is vested in one man or a set of men; an oligarchy, so to speak, of kindred spirits.

The bill which became a law on August 9 provides for the consolidation into one bureau of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, the Rehabilitation Division of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, and so much of the Public Health Service as relates to the examination, assignment to hospitals, and welfare of persons who served in the World War. At the head of the bureau there is a director, who is responsible for the organization of the bureau, and who has complete supervision and control over the property and personnel, and who is authorized to adopt rules and regulations for the carrying out of the purposes of the law.

By consolidating all these Government agencies in one bureau, under the direction and control of a director of that bureau, it is believed much of the red tape and delay that have occurred through division of authority will be done away with.

The law also makes provision, in addition to the centralization at Washington, for the decentralization in the field. Provision is made for the establishment of 14 regional offices and such suboffices, not exceeding 140 in number, as may be deemed necessary by the director in the best interest of the work committed to the United States Veterans' Bureau and to carry out the purposes of the law. At the 14 regional offices the work of receiving applications, hearing complaints, holding examinations, passing on awards, and other routine work and investigations will be made for the proper and expeditious determination of compensation and insurance claims, and the furnishing of hospital care and vocational training, and other benefits to which the ex-service men are justly entitled under the laws passed by Congress. Each of the said regional offices is administratively complete in itself for its territory.

The suboffices are auxiliary to the regional offices and will exercise such powers as may be delegated to them by the director, except to make compensation and insurance awards and to grant vocational training.

There should be no division of responsibility or authority, which has been the source of a large number of complaints regarding the Government's handling of the problems of the ex-service men. In each of the regional offices the men in charge are responsible for maintaining proper and economic service and examinations for awards, for making payments, for hospitalization, vocational training, and other matters. The questions, in so far as possible, will be settled at the point of origin, near or in the presence of the man concerned, doing away with the necessity of all intermediary personnel and equipment heretofore required.

The director has complete responsibility for the proper administration of the central office at Washington and all the regional offices and suboffices throughout the country. He is responsible for the organization of the bureau and will have the power and authority to bring to his assistance such medical, advisory, and technical experts as will be necessary to meet all administration problems and intelligently perfect and establish a thorough business administration of all these governmental agencies established for the benefit of disabled ex-service men.

This measure had the indorsement of the American Legion, Private Soldiers and Sailors' Legion, Disabled Veterans' Relief Society, and other soldier organizations throughout the country. In fact, this legislation was the outgrowth of concrete recommendations made by the legislative committee of the American Legion and representatives of other soldier organizations.

The law has now been in operation since the 9th day of August, 1921, or about 110 days, and from reports that have been received it would appear that the law is working admirably and that the organization contemplated is being perfected as rapidly as possible in the various States and at Washington.

I am confident that when the law is in full operation and the various organizations have been completed throughout the country that the service to be rendered the ex-service men will be greatly benefited and that red tape, delays, and causes of complaint will be greatly reduced.

The House of Representatives has shown itself at all times ready and willing to make ample provisions for the maimed soldiers of the World War. On March 3, 1921, Congress passed what was known as the Wason bill, for the purpose of improving the facilities and service of the bureau. This bill was not signed by President Wilson. Most of the provisions of the Wason bill, however, were afterwards incorporated in the act of the establishment of the United States Veterans' Bureau. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House also reported favorably to the House what is known as the Stevenson bill, providing retirement pay for emergency officers of the recent war.

On the 29th day of May, 1920, the House also passed the Fordney bill, providing adjusted compensation for World War veterans.

The following is a statement of appropriations and trust funds of the United States Veterans' Bureau as of August 9, 1921:

Statement of appropriations and trust funds of the United States Veterans' Bureau Aug. 9, 1921.

Appropriations and trust funds.	Losses, premiums, and interest.	Amount appropriated.	Encumbrances.	Balance.
Losses on war risk insurance on American vessels, their cargoes, etc.	$50,000,000.00

[1] Includes allotments to United States Public Health Service, National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, War Department, and Navy Department.

The following amounts have been covered into the surplus fund:

Losses on war risk insurance on American vessels, their cargo, etc., and premiums on marine and seamen's insurance	$67,000,000.00
Military and naval family allowance	14,300,000.00
Salaries and expenses, 1918	51,943.09
Salaries and expenses, 1919	565,115.61
National security and defense	18,862.98
National security and defense, 1919	60,929.02

I might say by way of explanation of the first two items of the above statement, which relate to "American vessels, their cargoes, etc.," and "Premiums on marine and seamen's insurance," that they have nothing whatever to do with the benefits provided by law under the head of "Military and naval insurance." The Bureau of War Risk Insurance was originally established by an act which passed Congress on September 2, 1914, and contained provisions for the insurance by the United States of American vessels, their freight, cargoes, and so forth, against loss or damage by the risks of war whenever it appeared to the Secretary of the Treasury that American vessels, shippers, and importers in American vessels were unable in any trade to secure adequate war risk insurance on reasonable terms. Later this law was amended, making provision for insurance by the United States of masters, officers, and crews of American vessels against loss of life or personal injury by the risk of war and for compensation during detention following capture by enemies of the United States whenever it appeared to the Secretary of the Treasury that in any trade the need for such insurance existed. The aforesaid classes of insurance were never burdensome to the Government for out of premiums on marine and seamen's insurance sixty-seven millions have been covered into the surplus fund. The Division of Marine and Seamen's Insurance will soon go out of existence and only appears in this statement in an incidental way as being a part of the work of the bureau.

As to the items in the statement which relate to premiums on term insurance I might say that the amounts set forth were derived mainly from the premiums paid by the soldiers, sailors, and marines on their yearly renewable term insurance policies during the war. The Government's liability for insurance outstanding through the bureau at the close of the war was over thirty-nine billions.

When the Army was demobilized over 75 per cent of this insurance, as shown by the Hughes report, was allowed to lapse. During the war the premiums were largely deducted by the Government from the pay of the soldier. When the war was over, as heretofore stated, three-fourths of them or more discontinued the payment of their insurance premiums, and their insurance policies became inoperative. The money that had been collected for premiums during the war remained in the insurance fund to protect the policies that were in force. When the Government issued the insurance policies to the soldiers, sailors, and marines it assumed the expense of administration and the excess mortality and disability cost resulting from the hazards of war. This gave the soldiers, while engaged in war, insurance for less money than any commercial insurance company would or could furnish it to them in times of peace. In fact, commercial insurance companies would not assume the excess mortality and disability cost resulting from the hazards of war.

The Government went one step further, and in addition to that assumed all expenses of administration. The soldiers thus received insurance from the Government at less than peacetime rates.

The obligations of the Government at the present time for yearly renewable term insurance as a result of the war amount to $1,190,996,727.63. This amount will be paid to the beneficiaries of the holders of yearly renewable term insurance policies for a period extending over nearly 20 years. This fund representing the premiums paid on yearly renewable term insurance is separate and distinct from the fund created by the life insurance premiums on what is termed "converted insurance" (United States Government life insurance).

All United States Government life insurance premiums are credited to the fund or appropriation known as the United States Government life insurance fund, out of which all claims, loans, and cash surrenders are paid. This fund, which includes both premiums and interest on investments, now amounts to about $35,760,798.47.

It is estimated the expenditures for the current year for all of the aforesaid purposes will amount to something over $480,000,000, a trifle less than one-half billion.

The legislative work in behalf of the soldier has not in anywise been completed, and I am sure that Congress will approach this question in the future as in the past in a nonpartisan way, and will keep pace with the march of events and the demands of the hour.

Hospitalization and vocational training must be worked out in the light of experience. There are many theories, but all matters of this kind must finally pass through the crucible of actual experience in order to obtain the best results. Results are what the country wants. Results are what the soldiers want.

The laws relating to insurance should be construed for the benefit of the men concerned. If there is a doubt as to construction, that doubt should be resolved in favor of the disabled man. The observance of the spirit of the law rather than the exact letter should be the rule.

In considering legislation of this character every Member of Congress, in my judgment, should get the viewpoint of the man who went into the Army and Navy in good physical and mental condition; whose hopes were high; whose patriotism was aflame; whose future was propitious; and then in the short space of a few months, as a result of war service, we find him with an eye, or a leg, or an arm gone, or perhaps he may be suffering from the inexorable advances of an insidious disease; or we may behold him overwhelmed by a melancholia brought about by the nerve-racking experiences and hardships incident to a cruel and relentless warfare. What is he thinking about? How does the world look through his eyes when hope has all but fled, when the ambitions of his youth have vanished, when his days are filled with gloom, and his nights with sleeplessness and pain? The question naturally arises, What should we in justice do for him as a grateful and liberty-loving people that he may in a measure be compensated in a material way and possess a contented mind?

A number of unusual cases have been called to the attention of Congress in the consideration of this legislation. One was that of Henry Bitter, from my own district. His residence is at Dubuque, Iowa. He enlisted on May 27, 1918, at Dubuque, in Company C, Three hundred and fifty-second Infantry, and went to France. He was injured on November 16, 1918, five days after the armistice was declared. Just before the armistice was signed orders were received to go to the Toul sector. He was detailed to go to Luneville to a divisional gas school. On the last day of this school the captain in command ordered a maneuver in honor of the brigadier general and some French officers. The men were to simulate an advance through a smoke screen, and carried offensive hand grenades. The pin in one of the grenades which he carried worked its way out and the grenade exploded prematurely, causing his injuries. He suffered the loss of both eyes and both hands. He appeared before our committee in person, and after he had stated the facts relative to his injuries he made this significant and courageous statement:

I have been discharged from the Army. I have lost much and have tried to keep from becoming despondent. I still have faith that my Government will treat me justly. I will try to fight for what there is left in life for me.

He is now receiving $200 per month as compensation and $57.50 per month as insurance, or a total of $257.50 per month, and he will receive it as long as he lives.

The statement of this young man speaks of a courage that knows no defeat, and of an undying patriotism for his country. His patriotism and his courage should be typical of every American soldier who took part in the greatest conflict of all the ages.

OF

HON. ADDISON T. SMITH,

OF IDAHO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, January 23, 1922.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the unanimous consent which has just been granted me by the House to insert in the RECORD the able address of the President to the agricultural conference now in session in this city, I submit the same herewith:

TEXT OF PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS IN OPENING FARM CONFERENCE.

Secretary Wallace and members of the conference: It is an occasion of the greatest satisfaction to me that Secretary Wallace's invitation has been so widely and cordially accepted. I confess the firm belief that in the public life of a people so intelligent as the American Nation most problems may be regarded as well on the way to solution when they are once reduced to their simplest terms and generally understood. This conference was called with the aim to bring about such a general understanding of the critical situation now confronting American agriculture.

We all understand that this conference is not a legislative body. Its recommendations will require to be written into the statute books by other authorities or applied in administration after sanction by those who must assume responsibility. But we do confidently anticipate that the considerations here had will be helpful and illuminating to those immediately responsible for the formulation of public policy in dealing with these problems. Therefore, it has seemed to me, I can make no more appropriate observation than that your work here will be of value precisely as you address yourselves to the realities, the matters of fact, the understanding of conditions as they are, and the proposal of feasible and practicable methods for dealing with those conditions.

Concerning the grim reality of the present crisis in agriculture, there can be no differences of opinion among informed people. The depressions and discouragements are not peculiar to agriculture, and I think it fair to say there could have been no avoidance of a great slump from war-time excesses to the hardships of readjustment. We can have no helpful understanding by assuming that agriculture suffers alone, but we may fairly recognize the fundamental difficulties which accentuate the agricultural discouragements and menace the healthful life of this basic and absolutely necessary industry.

WAR SERVICE OF FARMERS.

I do not need to tell you or the country of the supreme service that the farmer rendered our Nation and the world during the war. Peculiar circumstances placed our allies in Europe, as well as our own country, in a position of peculiar and unprecedented dependence on the American farmer. With his labor supply limited and in conditions which made producing costs high beyond all precedent, the farmer rose to the emergency. He did everything that was asked of him and more than most people believed it was possible for him to do. Now, in his hour of disaster, consequent on the reactions from the feverish conditions of war, he comes to us asking that he be given support and assistance which shall testify our appreciation of his service. To this he is entitled not only for the service he has done but because if we fail him we will precipitate a disaster that will affect every industrial and commercial activity of the Nation.

The administration has been keenly alive to the situation, and has given encouragement and support to every measure which it believed calculated to ameliorate the condition of agriculture. In the effort to finance crop movements, to expand foreign markets, to expand credits at home and abroad, much has been accomplished. These have been, it is true, largely in the nature of emergency measures. So long as the emergency continues it must be dealt with as such, but at the same time there is every reason for us to consider those permanent modifications of policy which may make relief permanent, may secure agriculture so far as possible against the danger that such conditions will arise again, and place it as an industry in the firmest and most assured position for the future.

You men are thoroughly familiar with the distressing details of present conditions in the agricultural community. The whole country has an acute concern with the conditions and the problems which you are met to consider. It is a truly national interest, and not entitled to be regarded as primarily the concern of either a class or a section.

AGRICULTURE OLDEST OF INDUSTRIES.

Agriculture is the oldest and most elemental of industries. Every other activity is intimately related to and largely dependent upon it. It is the first industry to which society makes appeal in every period of distress and difficulty. When war is precipitated the first demand is made on the farmer—that he will produce the wherewithal for both combatants and the civil population to be fed, and in large part also to be clothed and equipped. It is a curious fact that agriculture has always been the first line of support of communities in war and too commonly the victim of those distresses which emanate from great conflicts. Perhaps I may be pardoned a word by way of developing this idea. Until comparatively very recent times the land was the first prize of victory in war. The conqueror distributed the subjugated soil among his favorites and gave them his prisoners as slaves to work it. Thus the ownership of the land became the symbol of favor and aristocracy, while the working of it was regarded as the task of menials dedicated to ill-paid toil in order that the owners of the land and the rulers of the State might be able to maintain themselves in luxury and to enforce their political authority.

Coming down through the ages, we see the advance of civilization gradually emancipating the soil from this low estate. We see the institutions of serfdom and villenage, under the feudal order, succeeding those of slavery. Later we see the creation of a rural peasantry, comprising broadly those who till the soil, but in most cases do not own it, and whose political rights are very restricted. It is indeed not until we come to very recent times and to our own country's development that we see the soil lifted above the taint of this unjust heredity and restored to the full dignity and independence to which it is entitled.

Even in our own times and under the most modern and enlightened establishments the soil has continued to enjoy less liberal institutions for its encouragement and promotion than many other forms of industry. Commerce and manufacturing have been afforded ample financial facilities for their encouragement and expansion, while agriculture on the whole has lagged behind. The merchant, the manufacturer, the great instruments of public transportation, have been provided methods by which they enlist necessary capital more readily than does the farmer. A great manufacturing industry can consolidate under the ownership of a single corporation with a multitude of stockholders a great number of originally separate establishments, and thus effect economies and concentrations and acquire for itself a power in the markets where it must buy and in the markets where it must sell such as have not been made available to agriculture. The farmer is the most individualistic and independent citizen among us. He comes nearest to being self-sufficient, but precisely because of this he has not claimed for himself the right to employ those means of cooperation, coordination, and consolidation, which serve so usefully in other industries. A score or more of manufacturers consolidate their interests under a corporate organization and attain a great increase of their power in the markets, whether they are buying or selling. The farmer from the very mode of his life has been estopped from these effective combinations. Therefore, because he buys and sells as an individual it is his fate to buy in the dearest and sell in the cheapest market.

FARMERS REQUIRE CAPITAL.

The great industrial corporation sells its bonds in order to get what we may call its fixed or plant capital, just as the farmer sells a mortgage on his land in order to get at least a large part of his fixed or plant capital. I am not commending the bonding or mortgage system of capitalization, rather only recognizing a fact. But there in large part the analogy ends. Both the manufacturer and the farmer still require provision of working capital. The manufacturer, whose turnover is rapid, finds that in the seasons when he needs unusual amounts of working capital he can go to the bank and borrow on short-time notes. His turnover is rapid, and the money will come back in time to meet his short-term obligation. The merchant finances his operations in the same way. But the farmer is in a different case. His turnover period is a long one; his annual production is small compared to the amount of investment. For almost any crop the turnover period is at least a year; for live stock it may require two or three years for a single turnover. Yet the farmer is compelled, if he borrows his working capital, to borrow for short periods, to renew his paper several times before his turnover is possible, and to take the chance that if he is called upon untimely to pay off his notes he may be compelled to sacrifice growing crops or unfinished live stock. Obviously, the farmer needs to have provisions, adapted to his requirements, for extension of credit to produce his working capital.

Under the necessities of war time, consolidation and centralization of credit resources and financial capabilities went far to sustain the struggle. Essential industries were extended the help and support of society because society recognized its dependence on them. Much that was economically unsound and unfair was perpetrated under cover of this effort to uphold necessary industrial factors. But the lesson was useful and justifies inquiry as to whether, properly adapted to peace conditions, the methods of larger integration and wider cooperation might not well be projected into times of peace. The need of better financial facilities for the farmer must be apparent on the most casual consideration of the profound divergence between methods of financing agriculture and other industries. The farmer who owns his farm is capitalist, executive, and laborer all in one. As capitalist he earns the smaller return on his investment. As executive he is little paid, and as laborer he is greatly underpaid in comparison to labor in other occupations.

FINANCES MISUNDERSTOOD.

There is much misconception regarding the financial status of agriculture. If the mortgage indebtedness of farms shows, over a given period, a marked tendency to increase, the fact becomes occasion for concern. If during the same period the railroads or the great industries controlled by corporations find themselves able to increase their mortgage indebtedness by dint of bond issues, the fact is heralded as evidence of better business conditions and of capital's increased willingness to engage in these industries and thus insure larger production and better employment of labor. Both the mechanism of finance and the preconceptions of the community are united in creating the impression that easy access to ample capital is a disadvantage to the farmer, and an evidence of his decay in prosperity, while precisely the same circumstances are construed in other industries as evidence of prosperity and of desirable business expansion.

In the matter of what may be called fixed investment capital the disadvantage of the farmer so strongly impressed public opinion that a few years ago the Federal Farm Loan Board was established to afford better supplies of capital for plant investment and to insure moderate interest rates. But while unquestionably farm finance has benefited, the board has thus far not extended its operations to the provision of working capital for the farmer as distinguished from permanent investment in the plant. There should be developed a thorough code of law and business procedure, with the proper machinery of finance, through some agency, to insure that turnover capital shall be as generously supplied to the farmer and on as reasonable terms as to other industries. An industry, more vital than any other, in which near half the Nation's wealth is invested, can be relied upon for good security and certain returns.

In the aggregate, the capital indebtedness of the country's agricultural plant is small, not large. Compared with other industries, the wonder is that agriculture, thus deprived of easy access to both investment and accommodation capital, has prospered even so well.

The lines on which financial support of agriculture may be organized are suggested in the plan of the Federal Farm Loan Board and in those rural finance societies which have been so effective in some European countries. The cooperative loaning associations of Europe have been effective incentives to united action by farmers and have led them directly into cooperation in both production and marketing, which have contributed greatly to the stabilization and prosperity of agriculture. Whether we examine the cooperative societies of Russia, now recognized as the most potent support in that disturbed country for orderly society, or whether we turn to the great and illuminated cooperative associations which have strengthened the California agricultural industries, whether we examine the cooperative societies of Ireland and Denmark or the like organizations which handle the potatoes of Maine or the cantaloupes of Colorado, whether we consider these organizations as means to buying the farmer's requirements in a cheaper market or to selling his products in a more remunerative one, the conclusion is in all cases the same. It is that the farmer is as good a business man as any other when he has the chance; that he is capable of organization, cooperation, and coordination; that he will apply sound methods to his business whenever he has the chance; that his credit can be better established, his particular needs of capital on terms suited to his requirements can be met; that, these things accomplished, he ceases to be an underpaid laborer, an unpaid executive, and a capitalist with an unremunerative investment.

SELF-HELP NECESSARY.

It can not be too strongly urged that the farmer must be ready to help himself. This conference would do most lasting good if it would find ways to impress the great mass of farmers to avail themselves of the best methods. By this I mean that, in the last analysis, legislation can do little more than give the farmer the chance to organize and help himself.

Take cooperative marketing. American farmers are asking for, and it should be possible to afford them, ample provision of law under which they may carry on in cooperative fashion those business operations which lend themselves to that method, and which, thus handled, would bring advantage to both the farmer and his consuming public. In countries where these facilities and opportunities have been afforded such cooperative organizations have been carried to the highest usefulness and are recognized as aiding both farmer and consumer. They make the farmer's selling price higher and the consumer's buying price lower.

But when we shall have done this the farmers must become responsible for doing the rest. They must learn organization and the practical procedures of cooperation. These things we can not do for them, but we can and should give them the chance to do them for themselves. It will be for them to demonstrate their readiness and willingness and ability to utilize such instrumentalities. There is need for wide dissemination of information and understanding of methods and for development of what I may call the spirit and purpose of cooperation. The various excellent societies of farmers which are represented here have a large responsibility in this regard. They have already done much, but they have much more to do if the American farmer shall be brought most effectively to help himself through organization and cooperation.

One of the most serious obstacles to a proper balancing of agricultural production lies in the lack of essential information. All too frequently such information is gathered by private interests whose concern is private profit rather than the general good. Agriculture can not thrive under conditions which permit the speculator, the broker, the forestaller, because of superior information, to become chief beneficiaries. The element of speculation in crop production is at best so great as to dictate that other speculative elements, always liable to be manipulated to the disadvantage of the producer, shall be reduced to the minimum.

SUGGESTS METHODS OF AID.

With proper financial support for agriculture, and with instrumentalities for the collection and dissemination of useful information, a group of cooperative marketing organizations would be able to advise their members as to the probable demand for staples, and to propose measures for proper limitations of acreages in particular crops. The certainty that such scientific distribution of production was to be observed would strengthen the credit of agriculture and increase the security on which financial advances could be made to it. The disastrous effects which arise from overproduction are notorious. The congressional joint committee on agricultural conditions, in the valuable report which it has recently issued, declares that a deficiency of one-tenth in the production of a particular staple means an increase of three-tenths in the price, while a deficit of two-tenths in production will mean an increase of eight-tenths in the price.

The converse of this is just as emphatically true. In a recent address to the Congress I stated this situation thus:

It is rather shocking to be told, and to have the statement strongly supported, that 9,000,000 bales of cotton raised on American plantations in a given year will actually be worth more to the producers than 13,000,000 would have been. Equally shocking is the statement that 700,000,000 bushels of wheat raised by American farmers would bring them more money than a billion bushels. Yet these are not exaggerated statements. In a world where there are tens of millions who need food and clothing which they can not get such a condition is sure to indict the social system which makes it possible.

It is apparent that the interest of the consumer, quite equally with that of the producer, demands measures to prevent these violent fluctuations which result from unorganized and haphazard production. Indeed, the statistics of this entire subject clearly demonstrate that the consumer's concern for better stabilized conditions is quite equal to that of the producer. The farmer does not demand special consideration to the disadvantage of any other class; he asks only for that consideration which shall place his vital industry on a parity of opportunity with others and enable it to serve the broadest interest.

TOUCHES ON TRANSPORTATION.

No country is so dependent upon railroad transportation as is the United States. The irregular coast lines of Europe, its numerous indenting arms of the sea, as well as its great river system, afford that continent exceptional water transportation. The vast continental area of the United States is quite differently situated, its greater dependence upon railroad transportation being attested by its possession of near one-half the railroad mileage of the world, and even this is not adequate. The inevitable expansion of population will enormously increase the burden upon our transportation facilities, and proper forethought must dictate the present adoption of wise and farseeing policies in dealing with transportation.

If broad-visioned statesmanship shall establish fundamentally sound policies toward transportation, the present crisis will one day be regarded as a piece of good fortune to the Nation. To this time railroad construction, financing, and operation have been unscientific and devoid of proper consideration for the wider concerns of the community. To say this is simply to admit a fact which applies to practically every railroad system in the world. It is as true regarding the railroads of Canada and Great Britain as it is in reference to those of the United States. It is equally applicable to the railways of continental Europe, in whose development considerations of political and military availability have too far overweighed economic usefulness. In America we have too long neglected our waterways. We need a practical development of water resources for both transportation and power. A large share of railway tonnage is coal for railroad fuel. The experience of railway electrification demonstrates the possibility of reducing this waste and increasing efficiency. We may well begin very soon to consider plans to electrify our railroads. If such a suggestion seems to involve inordinate demands upon our financial and industrial power, it may be replied that three generations ago the suggestion of building 260,000 miles of railways in this country would have been scouted as a financial and industrial impossibility. Waterway improvement represents not only the possibility of expanding our transportation system, but also of producing hydroelectric power for its operation and for the activities of widely diffused industry.

I have spoken of the advantage which Europe enjoys because of its access to the sea, the cheapest and surest transportation facility. In our own country is presented one of the world's most attractive opportunities for extension of the seaways many hundred miles inland. The heart of the continent, with its vast resources in both agriculture and industry, would be brought in communication with all the ocean routes by the execution of the St. Lawrence waterway project. To enable ocean-going vessels to have access to all the ports of the Great Lakes would have a most stimulating effect upon the industrial life of the continent's interior. The feasibility of the project is unquestioned, and its cost, compared with some other great engineering works, would be small. Disorganized and prostrate, the nations of central Europe are even now setting their hands to the development of a great continental waterway, which, connecting the Rhine and Danube, will bring water transportation from the Black to the North Sea, from Mediterranean to Baltic. If nationalist prejudice and economic difficulties can be overcome by Europe, they certainly should not be formidable obstacles to an achievement less expensive and giving promise of yet greater advantages to the peoples of North America. Not only would the cost of transportation be greatly reduced but a vast population would be brought overnight in immediate touch with the markets of the entire world.

NEW CONCEPTION NEEDED.

This conference need have no fear of unfortunate effects from the fullest development of national resources. A narrow view might dictate, in the present agricultural stress, antagonism to projects of reclamation, rehabilitation, and extension of the agricultural area. To the contrary, if agriculture is to hold its high place, there must be the most liberal policy in extending its opportunity. The war, as was recently well said by the Secretary of Agriculture, has brought our country more quickly, but not more inevitably, to the necessity of deciding whether this shall be predominantly an industrial country or one in which industry and agriculture shall be encouraged to prosper side by side and to complement each other in building here a community of diverse interests. If our policy shall be, as it ought, to encourage the dual development, then we have need to consider the early and continuing reclamation of those great areas which, with proper treatment, would become valuable additions to our agricultural capacity. To this end every practical proposal for watering our arid and semiarid land, for reclaiming cut-over forest areas, for protecting fertile valleys from inundations, and for draining the potentially rich and widely extended swamp areas, should be given the full encouragement of the Government. All this should be a part of recognized permanent policy. Not otherwise will it be possible to keep the Nation self-supporting and as nearly self-contained as it has been in the past.

There must be a new conception of the farmer's place in our social and economic scheme. The time is long past when we may think of farming as an occupation fitting for the man who is not equipped for or has somehow failed at some other line of endeavor. The successful farmer of to-day, far from being an untrained laborer working every day and every hour that sun and weather permit, is required to be the most expert and particularly the most versatile of artisans, executives, and business men. He must be a good deal of an engineer to deal with problems of drainage, road building, and the like. He requires the practical knowledge of an all-round mechanic to handle his machinery and get best results from it. The problems of stock raising and breeding demand understanding of biology, while those of plant raising and breeding call for a wide practical knowledge of botany and plant pathology.

In handling his soils for best results, in using fertilizers, determining rotations, and in selecting and using feeds for stock he has need for a working knowledge of chemistry. As our timber supply is reduced his services in conserving and expanding the timber resources of the farm will be increasingly important, necessitating an intimacy with forestry and forestation. There is no business in which the executive talents of the skilled organizer and manager are more absolutely necessary than in successful farming, and this applies alike to the producing, the buying, and the selling phases of farming. Along with all this the farmer must have untiring energy and a real love and enthusiasm for his splendid profession—for such I choose to call the vocation of the farmer—the most useful, and it ought to be made one of the most attractive among all lines of human effort.

A Federal Antilynching Law Is Unconstitutional—The Dyer Bill, If Enacted, Would Be Most Unwise and Absolutely Unworkable.

OF
HON. IRA G. HERSEY, OF MAINE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

On the bill (H. R. 13) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching.

Tuesday, January 24, 1922,

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Speaker, on January 10 I addressed this House as a member of the Judiciary Committee in opposition to the antilynching bill, so called. I attempted at that time to frankly and fully state my position, first, that the bill was unconstitutional; and second, that the results that would follow from its enactment would be most unwise and disastrous to the peace of this country; that the bill was absolutely unworkable, and could not possibly be any benefit to the colored people of the Nation who demanded it.

The debate of 14 hours upon this bill is very nearly closed, and before we enter now under the five-minute rule for amendments to the bill it would be well, it seems to me, to pause for a moment and get clearly in our mind what has so far been settled by these 14 hours of debate.

Of course those Members who entered upon the debate with prejudiced minds, bound by prior pledges to vote for the bill, and who now feel that their political fortunes are imperilled by voting against this bill, have not changed their minds in the least during this discussion. I think it is the almost unanimous opinion on the Republican side that the attempt to force through an antilynching bill as a party measure was most unfortunate, and every Republican now seems disposed to vote against the bill if they possibly can do so without alienating the colored vote and bringing upon their heads defeat at the next election. I have had a number of my Republican colleagues come to me and say, "I am satisfied this bill ought not to pass. I am convinced that it is unconstitutional, and I have serious doubts whether it will accomplish anything but bad results; but I had promised my colored constituents that I would support such a bill before I had examined it with the idea that it was all right. Now, what shall I do? I would like to get rid of the whole mess." My advice has been to my Republican friends the same as that given by Mark Twain, when he said:

When in doubt, tell the truth.

When in doubt what we as Republicans ought to do in a matter of this kind there seems to me only one course. Defeat the measure and tell the colored people the truth, that the bill is unconstitutional and would not accomplish anything for their benefit, but would greatly injure their future, and after you have done this join with those who oppose this bill in the creation of a commission such as is advocated by the President to study and report upon this question to find out what practical means or methods can be used to lessen the crime of lynching in this Nation.

While the debate upon this bill has been somewhat lengthy, I think it has been very enlightening and profitable to the Congress. "Error has a brief life; truth survives and is eternal." The longer this bill is studied the more the lawyers in this Congress investigate the decisions of the courts the less support the bill will have, however. In my opinion, no lawyer in the House that approaches this bill with an unprejudiced mind and has not previously committed himself to colored constituents, and is free from fear or coercion in the performance of his duty, can arrive at any other conclusion but that this bill stands without any support whatever in the Constitution or laws of the land, and that it attacks the very foundation of a republican and constitutional form of government like ours, and, further, that its enactment would be the entering wedge to the destruction of the rights of the common people in every State of the Union.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], a good lawyer and one whom I greatly value as a friend, but who has the misfortune to have in his district a large organization of colored voters that pay no attention to the right of Congress to enact this legislation or whether this legislation is right or wrong, legal or illegal, constitutional or unconstitutional, but believe that every crime can be banished and the millenium brought to us by United States troops, marshals, and Federal courts, in his speech on this bill January 17, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], said:

Whatever our views of State rights may be we must recognize that under present day conditions in the solution of national questions State boundaries are becoming vanishing places on the map. I count myself as one who deplores that tendency. It seems to me every State should have the initiative that something should be done to promote its dignity, its pride, and independent action.

I agree with the gentleman from Ohio that this Nation is drifting like the ancient republics away from the government of the people by the people and for the people into a strong Federal Government at Washington where all State rights and all State laws are to be abolished and the people are to be ruled by Federal agents, Federal courts, Federal marshals, Federal attorneys, and Federal troops until, as suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, every State line will be obliterated and every State shall be blended into a strong government, and our future history will be written by some nation that survives us. It will not be "The rise and fall of Rome" but "The rise and fall of the American Republic."

To the Members of this House who have favored this bill by making speeches on the floor or inserting their remarks in the RECORD, under leave to print, and have treated this question only by exaggerating certain features of the crime of lynching and claiming that all who oppose this bill are advocating lynching, I have no answer to make. They throw no light upon the question by saying they oppose lynching. They simply betray their great anxiety to hide themselves behind their want of investigation of the whole question and to discharge political obligations to colored constituents.

I wish to commend to this House a careful consideration of the speeches made by the Representatives of the South, who represent a people against whom this bill is aimed. I do not recall that anywhere in any word or utterance in the whole debate has anyone who has opposed this measure said a word in defense of the crime of lynching. True, many of them have called our attention to many of the causes, conditions, and circumstances that have brought about lynchings in their State. The speeches of such gentlemen as SUMNERS, of Texas; TILLMAN, of Arkansas; Judge MONTAGUE, of Virginia; and in fact all who have spoken against this bill, have viewed the subject from a high plane and made statesmanlike opposition that have appealed to all lawyers who respect the decisions of the courts, as patriots who love the whole country, as good citizens that represent a people who are doing their best to settle in peace the most gigantic problem that ever faced a great people.

It may be said, however, that the Members of this House from the South are prejudiced and that their arguments are colored and strained to meet that prejudice. However that may be, this House is not confined to the legal or any other argument made by the Members from the Southern States. Lawyers from the North, who have no possible interest to excuse the crime of lynching, and who can not be prejudiced in any way against this bill, have presented to you lawyerlike arguments that are unanswerable against the constitutionality of this bill, and at the same time have pointed out clearly to you and me the awful consequences that must follow from the enactment of this very unwise measure. You who have heard the argument of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS], who have listened to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED], who have read the magnificent address of Col. PARKER of New Jersey, and who have paid attention to the fine legal argument of our honored colleague from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] must have been convinced that these men from their investigations have been convinced that this bill is clearly unconstitutional and ought not to be enacted into law.

The arguments made by the proponents of the bill, it seems to me, must have been very disappointing to those who hoped that they might point out somewhere a hook upon which to hang a hope for the passage of this bill. The leader of the opposition, as far as lawyers were concerned, was the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

I listened, as many of you did, to his lengthy arguments in defense of the bill. He spent much time in telling about the awful crime of lynching. He, too, paraded the statistics of lynching as proof that a crisis existed, and that Congress must do something at once to stop this awful crime of lynching in this country. He tried to avoid the fact that there were less lynchings last year in this country than in any other period for the last 36 years, and that while the country has been flooded during the past year by a great crime wave, where murders, highway robbery, and burglary have greatly increased to the alarm of the Nation, lynching has decreased 25 per cent during the same period.

In his legal argument in support of the bill he said this:

There remains to be considered the question as to the validity or constitutionality of the bill. I can not do otherwise than to admit that great doubts have arisen upon this subject; that there have been numerous decisions of the court upon questions submitted which seem to deny the application of the fourteenth amendment to conditions justifying the passage of this bill.

He then goes on to state that in arriving at a decision on the constitutionality of the bill we should not depend entirely upon the fourteenth amendment, and he said this in the face of the fact that the bill is wholly based upon the fourteenth amendment. He then attempts to quote from the Cruikshank case (92 U. S., p. 542), that the people of the United States resident within a State are subject to two governments, one State and the other National, but he forgets or neglects—unintentionally, I have no doubt—to state the real point settled by the Cruikshank case, which decision held that Congress had no power to make a Federal offense the criminal act of an individual within the State. He cited the dissenting opinion of the court in another case, from which dissenting opinion he argued as a supporting decision of this bill, and said that in his opinion the Supreme Court would some time overrule its opinion, which is against this bill, and make thereby this bill constitutional, and so forth.

He then goes on to quote from one Prof. Burgess, who says that the Supreme Court was wrong in its decision, and that he has perfect confidence that the day will come when it will be seen to be intensely reactionary and will be overturned.

In the debate I put to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] the following question:

Mr. HERSEY. In the State of Ohio, of which the gentleman is, perhaps, more familiar than any other State, does the State of Ohio deny to its citizens the equal protection of the law?

Mr. BURTON. Once in a while a mob in the State does.

Mr. HERSEY. During the past year has the State of Ohio denied to any of its citizens the equal protection of the laws?

Mr. BURTON. I know cases have been brought to my attention where the claim has been made that it has, although there have been no lynchings.

Then he is driven to the necessity of supporting this bill by taking the position that wherever a lynching or a murder occurs in his State his State has denied to the person so lynched or murdered the equal protection of the laws.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE], who also represents a large colored constituency, entered the fray as a great constitutional lawyer and claimed on the floor that this bill was clearly constitutional, because he had examined certain decisions which had not met the eye of any other lawyer, and he proceeded at great length to quote from certain State decisions which had never been before the Supreme Court. He quoted with much satisfaction to himself the case of Ex parte Siebold, found in One hundredth United States, page 387, and claimed that that case settled this whole matter. He claimed in that case that a citizen of a State had committed a certain crime in the State and that the United States marshal took him before a United States court and convicted him, and that the Supreme Court sustained the Federal authorities in his arrest and conviction, and therefore that the Supreme Court had held that the fourteenth amendment authorized Congress to enact a law to make any criminal act of an individual in any State a Federal offense and to punish him in the United States court. An examination of this case discloses the fact that the defendant was an election judge in a certain district of his State and that in the election of a Member of Congress he had obstructed the election and by his illegal rulings had deprived certain persons of voting. There was a Federal statute covering elections of Members of Congress and punishing any interference with the proper conduct and purity of the elections, and under that statute the defendant was arrested and tried in the United States court.

It was clearly a Federal offense made not only so by Congress but by the Constitution under which Members of Congress are elected and had no possible application to the bill in question, and yet, perhaps, some sitting by and hearing the gentleman from Kansas in his long and legal dissertation were convinced that such cases applied.

I do not wish to go to the extent of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS], a member of the committee, who said of the gentleman from Kansas, that he had quoted a vast number of cases but that none of them applied to the bill in question. I do say, however, that I have not been able to find any case cited by the gentleman from Kansas that does apply. Perhaps there is one.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] came to the defense of the bill in a legal argument in which he brushed aside all opposition to the bill by the assertion that the claim that wherever a lynching takes place the State thereby denies to the person lynched the equal protection of the laws. He cited two cases, as he claimed, in support of the bill, one where by State laws colored men had been denied the right to sit upon juries; the other was a case where by State law the Negro was not allowed equal rights with white voters at the ballot box. In both these cases the court properly held that these statutes discriminated against a class of persons on account of their color and were therefore null and void and fell of their own weight. He practically admitted in his argument that there was no authority for certain sections of the bill, that they were so doubtful that they ought to go out, and he had certain amendments which he expected would cure these sections, but that he relied upon the section that made the act of the peace officer the act of the State and that the torts or neglects of the sheriff, his deputies or police officer, was the act of the State, and that the unlawful torts action, negligence, or misfeasance of such officer was a denial by the State of the equal protection of the laws under the fourteenth amendment.

Nothing escapes the vigilant gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. He is not easily fooled by the plausible arguments of an attorney who attempts to hide his real meaning in a volume of words. When the gentleman from Minnesota stated that in his opinion as a lawyer the illegal and unlawful act of a State official was the act of the State, and that his torts were a denial by the State of the equal protection of the laws under the fourteenth amendment, the gentleman from Illinois put the gentleman from Minnesota on the rack for a few moments with the following result. I read from the RECORD, page 1343:

Mr. MANN. I do not know how I am going to vote upon this bill, and I want to get some information. Do I understand it is contended by the gentleman that if some man commits murder down here and is not apprehended we have the power to pass a law to have the Government of the United States apprehend him?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is possible that you would have to have a court first determine whether the State is refusing or is too weak or inefficient to have the man punished.

Mr. MANN. But I have stated the fact that he is not apprehended by the local authorities or by the State.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. What I mean to say is this: Of course, in the case of lynching everybody in the community knows what has happened. As a rule the people remain there and there is no difficulty if you want to arrest anyone to have that done. In the case of murder, in a great many instances the murderer skips out, so you can not arrest him. It might be proper, perhaps, in drafting an amendment of the kind I suggest to provide that a court should determine whether the State had used reasonable diligence. But I believe if the State fails to do its duty we have the power to impose penalties.

Mr. MANN. Of course, constitutional power is the same, regardless of what the amendment is.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; but we must take into consideration what the circumstances are.

Mr. MANN. The Supreme Court must take into consideration the power of Congress to enact legislation.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The manner of using the power depends upon the circumstances under which we exercise it.

Mr. MANN. The power of Congress does not depend upon circumstances.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The manner of exercising it depends upon the circumstances.

Mr. MANN. The power of Congress was fixed when the constitutional amendment became a part of the Constitution.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is true.

Mr. MANN. You have not changed the circumstances.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. You can not pass the same kind of a law and make it fit every case. You must adapt the law to the circumstances.

Mr. MANN. You could pass it if there had never been a lynching. There is no magic in the word "mob." I understand the gentleman rests his contention on the power to punish individuals; that the mob is a court acting for the State, and the State is responsible for them.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is one among other suggestions, but what I believe is this, that when the State fails to perform its functions the guaranty of the United States applies.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask this question: If we define the mob as five, of course we could define it as three; we could define it as one, could we not?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No.

Mr. MANN. Why not?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Because it would not be a mob.

Mr. MANN. We define the word "mob," and we could make it any number we please.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The old common-law definition of a mob required at least three persons.

Mr. MANN. Suppose this case: It is very common practice now, I regret to say, in cities and countries alike, that four or five or six gentlemen—I use the term—drive up in front of a bank or a store, or maybe stop at the side of a street, and pull a revolver on somebody and ask him to "put up." Suppose there were five of them? Have we the power on the part of the General Government to go and punish, or to seek out, or indict those men?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. When the State fails, but we have got to make some showing that the State is in default.

Mr. MANN. In most cases the State fails and the men go off and we do not get them. Have we the power to do it?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. My opinion is that under the fourteenth amendment we have the power whenever the State fails to perform its duty.

Mr. MANN. I understand, then, that the passage of this bill is a declaration that Congress has the power to provide for seizure and punishment of any individual who commits any crime in any State at any time hereafter?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Provided the State acquiesces and practically consents by its inaction, because then it endangers everyone in that community, because the effect is to deny protection of the laws.

To make the position of the chairman of the committee more ridiculous the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] took him in hand, as follows:

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Does the gentleman base the power of Congress upon the proposition that the Federal Government has jurisdiction whenever a State fails to prevent crime?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Whenever a State practically acquiesces in the lawlessness.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I say whenever a State fails to prevent crime.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think whenever a State fails to protect life, liberty, or property it is the duty of the Federal Government to see that it is done, and if it can not be done in any other way it may be done by punishing the individual at fault.

The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] answered the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD], and it seems to me settled the question in the mind of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], when he quoted the following from Guthrie on the Constitution, a great authority, as follows (p. 42):

It must be borne in mind that the Federal courts can not supervise or interfere with the internal affairs of a State unless some constitutional right has been invaded by State authority. The wrongful actions of individuals, unsupported by such authority, are not to be redressed under this amendment. They constitute merely private wrongs or crimes of the individuals. The denial of a constitutional right must rest upon some State law or State authority for its excuse or perpetration if the fourteenth amendment is to furnish any remedy.

And then the gentleman from Oregon quoted Branon on the Constitution, as follows:

It is hardly necessary to say again that the amendment does not touch the case of the individual or mob murder, as it deals not with acts of individuals but only with action by the State through its constituted authorities. Such murders by individuals or mobs are to be dealt with only by the States (p. 108).

This question, it seems to me, has been absolutely settled by many decisions. The first one to which I will call your attention is Billings v. State of Washington (67 Pac., 585):

Action by the plaintiff to recover from the State damages caused by the torts and neglects of the commissioner of public lands in issuing to plaintiff fraudulent deeds, etc. The Supreme Court of Washington dismissed the action against the State and said:

"It (the State) has not consented, either expressly or impliedly, to become responsible for the misconduct or negligence of its officers or agents; and in the absence of a statute making it liable in damages therefor no such action as the present one can be maintained against the State. (Story Ag. No. 319; Gibbons v. U. S., 8 Wall., 274; 19

L. ed., 453; Clodfelter v. State, 86 N. C., 51; 41 Am. Rep., 440; Clark v. State, supra; State v. Hill, supra; Langford v. U. S., 101 U. S., 341; 25 L. Ed., 1010.) Touching the liability of a State for the wrongful acts of its public officials, the Supreme Court of North Carolina, in Clodfelter v. State, supra, said:

"That the doctrine of respondeat superior applicable to the relations of principal and agent created between other persons, does not prevail against the sovereign in the necessary employment of public agents is too well settled upon authority and practice to admit of controversy. "No Government," says Mr. Justice Miller, "has ever held itself liable to individuals for the malfeasance, laches, or unauthorized exercise of power by its officers and agents." (Gibbons v. U. S., 8 Wall., 269; 19 L. Ed., 453.) And Judge Story declares in his work on agency, section 319: "The Government does not undertake to guarantee to any person the fidelity of any of the officers or agents whom it employs, since that would involve it in all its operations in endless embarrassments and difficulties and losses which would be subversive of the public interests." The language of Judge Story quoted in the Clodfelter case above cited is also quoted and approved by Mr. Justice Miller in Gibbons v. United States. It is further stated in the opinion of the court in Gibbons v. United States that "the general principle which we have already stated as applicable to all Governments forbids, on a policy imposed by necessity, that they should hold themselves liable for the unauthorized wrongs inflicted by their officers on the citizen though occurring while engaged in the discharge of official duties. * * * The relation of the State to the citizen is not one of contract, which implies an undertaking upon good consideration on the part of the State that all the functions of government shall be duly performed, or that it will employ none but capable and faithful agents. If an officer or agent of the State, in violation of law, commits an act to the injury of the citizen, it is an act beyond the scope of his agency, unauthorized by his principal, and the State is not liable therefor to the party injured."

GIBBONS v. UNITED STATES.

(75 U. S. Reports (8 Wall.), p. 274.)

Mr. Justice Miller:

* * * But it is not to be disguised that this case is an attempt, under the assumption of an implied contract, to make the Government responsible for the unauthorized acts of its officers, those acts being in themselves torts. No Government has ever held itself liable to individuals for misfeasance, laches, or unauthorized exercise of power by its officers and agents.

In the language of Judge Story (Story on Agencies, No. 319), "it does not undertake to guarantee to any person the fidelity of any of the officers or agents whom it employs, since that would involve it in all its operations in endless embarrassments and difficulties and losses, which would be subversive of the public interests." * * *

The cases of United States v. Kirkpatrick (9 Wheat., 720) and Dox v. The Postmaster General (1 Pet., 318) are of this class, and establish the principle that even in regard to matters connected with the cause of action relied on by the United States, the Government is not responsible for the laches, however gross, of its officers. (Nichols v. United States, 7 Wall., 122.)

COOKE ET AL. v. UNITED STATES.

(91 U. S. Reports (1 Otto.), 398.)

Chief Justice Waite:

Laches is not imputable to the Government in its character as sovereign by those subject to its dominion. (U. S. v. Kilpatrick, 9 Wheat., 735; Gibbons v. United States, 8 Wall., 269.)

WHITESIDE ET AL. v. UNITED STATES.

(93 U. S. Reports (3 Otto.) p. 256.)

Mr. Justice Clifford:

Different rules prevail in respect to the acts and declarations of public agents from those which ordinarily govern in the case of mere private agents. Principals, in the latter category, are in many cases bound by the acts and declarations of their agents, even where the act or declaration was done or made without any authority, if it appears that the act was done or declaration was made by the agent in the course of his regular employment; but the Government or public authority is not bound in such a case, unless it manifestly appears that the agent was acting within the scope of his authority or that he had been held out as having authority to do the act or was employed in his capacity as a public agent to do the act or make the declaration for the Government. (Story's agency (6th ed.), sec. 307 a; Lee v. Munroe, 7 Cr., 376.)

Although a private agent, acting in violation of specific instructions yet within the scope of his general authority, may bind his principal, the rule as to the effect of the like act of a public agent is otherwise, for the reason that it is better that an individual should occasionally suffer from the mistakes of public officers or agents than to adopt a rule which, through improper combinations or collusion, might be turned to the detriment and injury of the public. (Mayor v. Eschback, 17 Md., 282.)

Torts committed by an officer in the service of the United States do not render the Government liable in an implied assumpsit, even though the acts done were apparently for the public benefit. (Gibbons v. United States, 8 Wall., 274.)

HART v. UNITED STATES.

(U. S. Repts., vol. 95 (V. Otto.), p. 318.)

Chief Justice Waite:

Under the law as it stood when this suit was commenced no distilled spirits could be removed from a distillery warehouse before payment of the tax (15 Stat., 130, sec. 15) without subjecting all those engaged in such a removal to heavy penalties (id. 140, sec. 36). An officer of the United States had no authority to dispense with this requirement of the law. If in violation of his duty he permitted such a removal, he subjected himself to punishment, but did not bind the Government by his acts. The Government is not responsible for the laches or the wrongful acts of its officers. (Gibbons v. United States, 18 Wall., 269; United States v. Kirkpatrick, 9 Wheat., 720; United States v. Vanzandt, 11 id., 184; United States v. Nicholl, 12 id., 505; Jones et al. v. United States, 18 Wall., 662.)

On the question of the policy of this bill since my speech of January 10 I have received a great many communications from all over the Nation—from lawyers, judges, editors, business men, women's organizations, and, to my mind, the best thinkers of the country. I have not received a single letter in condemnation of my remarks except one from a New York organization "for the improvement of the colored people." I have not been condemned by the press anywhere that I have noticed, except in one instance. That is a vicious and abusive editorial in the organ of the colored people of the District of Columbia, called the Washington Bee, a weekly paper published in the interest of the colored people of the South.

I herewith place in the record as a part of my remarks a few extracts from some of this correspondence, which letters were not written to me for publication, and therefore I withhold the names of the writers and simply insert that part of these letters which has a bearing upon this bill as showing that public opinion is against this bill, and that the South should be left to settle this problem without the interference of Federal legislation.

The following from a judge of a United States court in the North:

I congratulate you on your stand against the antilynching bill. From what little I have read about the bill I think you are quite right. I think it is a very foolish move and very palpably unconstitutional.

From the head of one of the largest organizations of women voters in my State in the North:

Although my approval or disapproval amounts to very little to a Member of Congress, I do want you to know that I was very much pleased at your attitude and speech on the antilynching bill. I feel very keenly on the colored question and fully believe that we in the North can not rightfully tell the South how they can handle that question. It should not be a partisan question, and I am glad you had the courage of your convictions. The appeal to race, religion, or sect, while it may aid a party temporarily, always "backfires," and is in danger of hurting in most unexpected places, and while this bill on the face of it might seem to be entirely affecting the South, yet it could surprise us all when actually a law.

From one of the largest organizations of women in the South:

We thank you for the brave expression you gave to an unpopular view.

We wish you to know that we admire and appreciate the courage, sympathy, and justice of your attitude toward this problem.

The crime of lynching is to us so hideous and hateful a blot upon our escutcheon that we welcome all sympathetic efforts to help in its eradication.

We who deplore it must ever flinch with pain when attacked with bitter words, lacking all sympathetic understanding of the difficulties under which we labor. We rejoice that the words of our Henry Grady fell into the rich soil of your heart, where they took root and bore their fruit in your speech before Congress.

This is from a very popular and successful merchant in my State, who spends many winters in the South:

I want to say to you in this letter that I am greatly impressed with the stand you have taken in your so-called "southern" speech. I remember that before I went South I was all ready to settle their question, as practically all northerners are, but after looking the matter over I decided it was their question, and then I further decided that they were getting it into shape and would take care of the matter in good season.

I wish that others had come to the bat with you, but I will venture to say that 99 per cent of the northern men who heard you agreed with you in their heart, and I am proud of you for standing up and telling the truth.

Here is what a prominent southern railroad official writes:

One has to really live and have his being in the South to fully understand its problems.

The average southern man will actually fight for one or any of the Negroes whom he has employed as long as they do halfway right, and will and does stand up for them in the courts and elsewhere to the extent of cheerfully putting out his hard-earned money on any occasion arising.

The proposed law would only make matters worse. The Negro is doing very well here—in fact, better than he could do anywhere else under the sun—as long as he does not turn brute and desecrate some home; then, of course, all the laws in the universe would not save him.

Outrages of the kind to which I have reference have, I am glad to say, almost ceased; and I believe firmly if we are let alone the problem will finish working itself out happily, but if such a foolish and meddling law as the Dyer proposition is passed no one knows how things will be.

The cashier of a national bank in the South writes me as follows:

I have just read excerpts from your speech made in the House of Representatives yesterday against the infamous antilynching bill and I desire to express to you my thanks for your position.

Let us differ, if you please, on political alliances and respect each other's different views, but such an outrageous and unconstitutional bill as the one named above should be lost on the floor by an overwhelming vote, if not by unanimous consent.

My son was in the American Expeditionary Forces that went to France, and with him were boys from the North and the West, and they are friends, and there are others that were similarly placed, and no such spiteful bills as the antilynching bill should come up to estrange the friendships long needed for the good of the common country.

From the president of a soldiers' home in the South:

Please allow me to congratulate and thank you for your speech on the antilynching bill. What difference makes it whether we call ourselves Republicans or Democrats if we are fair-minded and patriotic, as you appear to be, to represent the whole country and not one corner only of it?

From a prominent business man in a city in Georgia:

As a native Georgian, born and raised in south Georgia, I know the Negro intimately, and no where in the world is he better taken care of or kindlier treated than right here in his natural home. As a law-abiding citizen I wish to state that the people of the Southland do not stand for lynchings any more than the people of other sections, and our people can handle the Negro problem in a most satisfactory manner.

Perhaps the South is misunderstood oftentimes, and it is very gratifying to us to have men of broad minds and stanch character who live north of the Mason and Dixon line to help us instead of criticizing and abusing us for the deeds committed by a very few men of low character. Your kindness in this instance will be remembered by our Georgia Representatives, I am sure.

The following is from a noted Christian worker in the South:

I want to thank you for your speech in the House of Representatives on the antilynching bill, showing the unfairness of the bill.

You show the right conception of the situation, that the South will work out such problems—the rights of State governments to deal with such cases.

There should be no sectional feelings between the North and the South. We are one country. We should work together for the good of our own country, "America," without prejudice. A nation united will stand, divided we fall. We are all answerable to the same God for the way we administer justice to each other. As a people if we observed the Golden Rule, "Do unto others as we would have them do unto us," peace and harmony would dwell in our land.

I have the following from one of the most prominent lawyers in a southern State:

I deeply and sincerely thank you for your recent speech in Congress against the antilynching bill then pending. Yours was the language of a patriot and a statesman and not that of a sectional and time-serving politician, and is worthy of being classed with the best utterances of other great sons of Maine, notably, S. S. Prentiss, W. P. Fessenden, James G. Blaine, and of Thomas Brackett Reed, the greatest of the modern parliamentarians.

And I desire to add that this would be a greater and a grander country than it is if we had statesmen as lawmakers instead of mere politicians.

From a well-known business man in Alabama:

Racial antagonism comes principally from the younger Negroes, which is kept aflame by propaganda from organizations in New York City and Chicago. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, of New York City, issues a magazine entitled "The Crisis," and I have personally read in an issue of this magazine an article advising the Negroes to "demand their political and social rights even at the point of shotguns and pistols." Those from or of sections where the Negroes are in the minority can not appreciate what this section has to contend with. Normally our task requires the most careful consideration to solve, but with the propaganda sent among us from outsiders our task seems at times almost beyond solution, but we are going to do our best until the end, true to the tradition of the white race.

This from the secretary of one of the greatest industries of the South:

I want to thank you for your recent words before Congress against the Dyer bill, not that I care so much about the Dyer bill but I deeply appreciate the words of peace and friendship so beautifully and I think effectively uttered. Your speech was not only a masterly effort but it breathes the spirit that must rule the world in future if the world is to live in peace.

If more of your people would think and talk as you do—let the race question alone, let the South and the Negro work out their own salvation politically and socially—our people would be quick to respond. There would be no more solid South, politically or otherwise.

We are not Democrats because we love its tenets so well, but because of the continued utterances, unfriendly acts, and unfriendly legislation passed or attempted by northern men.

The South feels that the North is against us in various ways, which gives rise to a natural prejudice against the party they are affiliated with. The time is now more than ever ripe to wipe away all semblance of sectionalism, as the President is a well-balanced good fellow; the South wants some tariff protection; world problems loom greater, which engages more and more the best thought of the country; and it does seem that after 60 years of peace the various sections of our Nation could be reconciled and pull together for the things that are worth while and let the old scars heal up forever.

I thank God for a few like you, whose hearts are larger than their prejudice, who can see further than a geographical line, and whose souls are lighted from the throne of grace with a love that is not limited to their own hearths or States, but is sufficient for a nation and for the race of man.

The clerk of a great city in the South writes me:

The spirit that you have manifested will do more to decrease these crimes than will the bill on which you spoke, I think. So long as our beloved Southland receives the sympathetic consideration that we are receiving at the hands of Mr. Harding, Mr. Hoover, and such men as yourself, there is little danger of race outbreaks as have happened in the past.

I am a Democrat, even a Wilson Democrat of the deepest hue, but I have not been hesitant in saying among my friends here that unless the Democratic Party puts out the highest type of man in the next presidential race that I shall not hesitate to vote for Mr. Harding, for the reason that I am pleased very much with his administration and the race question has been laid aside by him. The man who is big enough to do this is worthy of the support of our people.

May not I say in conclusion, "God bless you and all of your kind, and may He hasten the day when our people of all sections may mix and mingle together to the end that we may love one another as is His will"?

I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that no President has recommended to Congress the enactment of a Federal antilynching law. There were more lynchings each year under McKinley, Roosevelt, Taft, and Wilson than there has been in this Nation during the past year. From an average of 112 lynchings it was reduced so that last year there were only 62. It is admitted that the last year produced the greatest crime wave in history in this country. This is explained in many ways, principally the results of the late war, but it is interesting to note that while crimes have greatly increased in this Nation in the past year, such as murders, robberies, and other high crimes, lynching diminished 25 per cent. It is also interesting to note that while President McKinley denounced lynching in unmeasured terms and was ever anxious to destroy the crime if possible, he never at any time advocated Federal statutes as a remedy for the race problem and the lessening of lynching.

In speaking on the race problem before the people of Tennessee at their centennial exposition, June 11, 1897, McKinley said:

Men and women I see about me from all parts of the country, and thousands more will assemble here before the exposition is closed. Let us always remember that whatever difference about politics may have existed, or still exist, we are all Americans before we are partisans, and cherish the welfare of all the people above party or State. Citizens of different States, we yet love all the States; and in turn all the States, by ties of interest, affection, and immortal memories, are attached to the Nation with unfailing and unceasing love. The lesson of the hour, then, is this: to be faithful to our opportunities in our several spheres, never forgetting that not one citizen or several citizens have the sole care of our Government, but all the citizens of all the States are equally responsible for its progress and preservation, and all are equal recipients of good or ill. Hopefully looking into the future, let us firmly resolve that whatever adverse conditions may temporarily impede our national progress, nothing shall permanently stay or defeat it.

Also, in his speech at a reunion of the North and the South, at Evansville, Ind., October 11, 1899, referring to the race problem and lynching, President McKinley said:

It gives me very great pleasure to participate with you, men of the North and men of the South, in this glad reunion. We are already unified. [Great applause.] The peace which Grant and Lee made at Appomattox has been kept [great applause], not by law or restraint but by love and fraternal regard [applause]; and the Union to-day rests, not in force, which might fail, but in the hearts of the people, which can not fail—a Union that can never be severed. [Applause.]

This Nation relies upon the patriotism of the people of the North and South to stand by the highest ideal of free government and pursue the path of duty and destiny with unfaltering step and unfailing courage.

Theodore Roosevelt followed McKinley in the presidential chair for two terms. He was a warm friend of the Negro and for all those things which would help his future. You will recall that he made many appointments of colored men to Federal offices. He also entertained at a dinner at the White House Booker T. Washington, but nowhere did he in a message to Congress or in any other way ever recommend any antilynching law or Federal legislation or United States marshals and courts to go into the South and settle the lynching problem. He denounced lynching at all times as a terrible crime, and planned to do everything in his power to bring about a lessening of this evil. In a speech on lynching and the race problem made on Memorial Day, 1902, at Arlington, he said:

In every community there are people who commit acts of well-nigh inconceivable horror and baseness. If we fix our eyes only upon these individuals and upon their acts, and if we forget the far more numerous citizens of upright and honest life and blind ourselves to their countless deeds of wisdom and justice and philanthropy, it is easy enough to condemn the community. There is not a city in this land which we could not thus condemn if we fixed our eyes solely upon its police record and refused to look at what it had accomplished for decency and justice and charity.

Also in his speech in Boston August 25, 1902, to an audience composed of a great many colored voters who came from the South to work in the hotels in Massachusetts, and who had formed an organization of Republicans which still exists, he said:

The lawmaking body gets into that most pernicious custom of passing a law not with reference to what will be done under it, but with reference to its effect upon the opinions of the voters. That is a bad thing. When any body of lawmakers passes a law, not simply with reference to whether that law will do good or ill, but with the knowledge that not much will come of it, and yet that perhaps the people as a whole will like to see it on the statute books, it does not speak well for the lawmakers and it does not speak well for the people either.

Chief Justice Taft followed Roosevelt in the President's chair. He is a great lawyer and jurist, and during his term of office he studied the race problem. He often visited the people of the South, but he never recommended any antilynching law. He said that such legislation was clearly unconstitutional and could not settle the problem. In speaking of the lynching problem in his inaugural address March 4, 1909, he said:

Personally, I have not the slightest race prejudice or feeling, and recognition of its existence only awakens in my heart a deeper sympathy for those who have to bear it or suffer from it, and I question the wisdom of a policy which is likely to increase it. Meantime, if nothing is done to prevent it, a better feeling between the Negroes and the whites in the South will continue to grow, and more and more of the white people will come to realize that the future of the South is to be much benefited by the industrial and intellectual progress of the Negro. The exercise of political franchises by those of his race who are intelligent and well-to-do will be acquiesced in, and the right to vote will be withheld only from the ignorant and irresponsible of both races.

Afterwards the Chief Justice, on May 26, 1909, addressed the Howard University, at Washington, an institution for colored boys to get a college education, and before that audience of colored students, speaking of the race problem and lynching, he said:

It seems to me that the future is in the hands of the race itself. I do not mean to say that cruelties are not to exist in the future and injustices and a great many reasons why complaints should be made against the inhumanity of man, but I do mean to say that there never has been a time in the history of the Negro race when the future offered such a basis for belief in your success as a race and for the belief that you have it in your hands to make that success as it is to-day.

Afterwards, at a banquet given him in Birmingham, Ala., on November 2, 1909, before a great audience, he discussed the lynching problem and said:

This country is ceasing to have sections, not ceasing to have traditions, and there is a definition that I want to make as emphatic as possible. I would not have the South give up a single one of her noble traditions. I would not have her abate a single bit of the deep pride she feels in all the great heroes who represented her in that awful struggle between the North and South. I would have the whole country know, as I believe the South is growing herself to know, that it is possible to preserve all those traditions intact and have a warm and deeply loyal love for the Old Flag to which she has come back and to know that the North respects her for those traditions she preserves, and does not ask her to discard one, but only wishes to unite with her in the benefits of a common country and of a sympathy and association between the peoples of the two sections that will certainly lead us on to a greater and greater future.

The Yale University Press, a publishing house in New Haven, Conn., has recently issued a great and a valuable historical work entitled "The Chronicles of America," containing 50 volumes, each volume written by a disinterested American historian. These volumes are down to date, published in 1920. In volume 42, written by Holland Thompson, a very reliable historian, speaking of the new South, he said:

On the whole, there is surprisingly little friction between the blacks and the whites. One may live a long time in many parts of the South without realizing that the most important problem of the United States lies all about him. Then an explosion comes, and he realizes that much of the South is on the edge of a volcano. For a time the white South attempted to divest itself of responsibility for the Negro. He had turned against those who had been his friends and had followed after strange Gods; therefore, let him go his way alone. This attitude never was universal nor was it consistently maintained; for there is hardly one of the older Negroes who does not have a white man to whom he goes for advice or help in time of trouble—a sort of patron, in fact. Many a Negro has been saved from the chain gang or the penitentiary because of such friendly interest, and many have been positively helped thereby toward good citizenship. Nevertheless, there has been a tendency on the part of the whites to remain passive, to wait until the Negro asked for help.

Undoubtedly there is now developing in the South a growing sense of responsibility for the welfare of the Negro. The Negro quarters of the towns, so long neglected, are receiving more attention from the street cleaners; better sidewalks are being built; and the streets are better lighted. The sanitary officers are more attentive. The landowner is building better cabins for his tenants and is encouraging them to plant gardens and to raise poultry and pigs. The labor contractor is providing better quarters, though conditions in many lumber and construction camps are still deplorable. Observant lawyers and judges say that they see an increasing number of cases in which juries evidently decide points of doubt in favor of Negro defendants, even where white men are concerned. Socially minded citizens are forcing improvement of the disgraceful conditions which have often prevailed on chain gangs and in prisons. Nor is this all. More white men and women are teaching Negroes than ever before. The oldest university in the United States points proudly to the number of Sunday schools for Negroes conducted by its students, and it is not alone in this high endeavor. Many southern colleges and universities are studying the Negro problem from all sides and are trying to help in its solution. The visiting nurses in the towns spend a large proportion of their time among the Negroes, striving to teach hygiene and sanitation. White men frequently lecture before Negro schools. Since the beginning of the Great War Negro women have been encouraged to aid in Red Cross work. Negroes have been appointed members of city or county committees of defense and have worked with the whites in many branches of patriotic endeavor. * * *

The mobs which have so often stained the reputation of the South by defiance of the law and by horrible cruelty as well do not represent the best elements of the South. The statement so often made that the most substantial citizens of a community compose lynching parties may have been partially true once, but it is not true to-day. These mobs are chiefly made up from the lowest third of the white community. Perhaps the persistence of the belief has prevented the wiser part of the population from stamping out such lawlessness; perhaps some lingering feeling of mistaken loyalty to the white race restrains them from strong action; perhaps the individualism of the southerner has interfered with general acceptance of the idea of the inexorable majesty of the law which must be vindicated at any cost. Yet, in spite of all these undercurrents of feeling, sheriffs and private citizens do on occasion brave the fury of enraged mobs to rescue or to protect. Attempts to prosecute participants in such mobs usually fail in the South, as elsewhere, but occasionally a jury convicts. * * *

Yet it must not be forgotten that over certain parts of the South a nameless dread is always hovering. In some sections an unaccompanied white woman dislikes to walk through an unlighted village street at night; she hesitates to drive along a lonely country road in broad daylight without a pistol near her hand; she does not dare to walk through the woods alone. The rural districts are poorly policed and the ears of the farmer working in the fields are always alert for the sound of the bell or the horn calling for help, perhaps from his own home. Occasionally, in spite of all precautions, some human animal, inflamed by brooding upon the unattainable, leaves a victim outraged and dead, or worse than dead. Granted that such a crime occurs in a district only once in 10 or even 20 years, that is enough. Rural folks have long memories, and in the back of their minds persists an uncontrollable morbid dread. The news of another victim sometimes turns men into fiends, who not only take life but even inflict torture beforehand. The mere suspicion of intent is sometimes enough to deprive such a community of its reason, for there are communities which have brooded over the possibility of the commission of the inexplicable crime until the residents are not quite sane upon this matter. Naturally calmness and forbearance in dealing with other and less heinous forms of Negro crime are not always found in such a neighborhood. This fact helps to explain, though not to excuse, some of the riots that occur.

The better element in the South, however, opposes mob violence, and this opposition is growing stronger and more purposeful. Associations have been formed to oppose mob rule and to punish participants.

In the course of this debate some of the advocates of this bill seem to think that there is something magical, powerful, irresistible in an act of Congress and that a perfect remedy for all evils is found in Federal legislation, and that all crimes may be prevented by Federal courts, United States marshals, Federal officials, and the Congress at Washington.

We all vividly recall how less than three years ago, while this House was in session, we here in Washington, under the shadow of the Capitol of the Nation experienced a terrible race riot which resulted in quite a number of whites and blacks being killed, and we were under Federal law, in a city that is governed by Federal laws, in a city governed by Federal police, and that, too, when this city was guarded by United States troops and when soldiers with their rifles rode in the street cars with their guns pointing out of the window, and when women did not dare to go out on the streets at night, and when the passions of the Negro were inflamed and he was a wild man with the gun. What would have happened to the city at that time had not the soldiers been quartered here and had we been left to the help given us by Federal laws, Federal police, and Federal courts? If race riots can not be prevented in the city of Washington under Federal officials and Federal courts and troops, how can they be prevented in the States by Federal marshals, officials, and courts, when these agencies may be hundreds of miles away from the scene of the riot?

The whole issue in a nutshell then is this: Can Congress by this antilynching bill lawfully enact a criminal code for the States to punish the peace officers of the States and deprive the States of the right of conducting their own affairs under the Constitution?

When Rome was at the height of its glory and power, the Roman lawmaking body started the downfall of the empire by enacting a code of laws and regulations for the homes and household of its citizens, saying how the servants in the house should conduct themselves, how they should act toward their masters and how the master should act toward his servants, and what should be the rule and regulations of his home. Every act of the State was put under the supervision and power of the central government at Rome.

Paul, the brave and fearless defender of the rights of the people against arbitrary and centralized power, sent a letter to the Romans, in which he said:

Who art thou that judgest another man's servants; to his own master he standeth or falleth.

And when certain advocates of centralized power in this Congress attempt to regulate the affairs of the States and to punish the supposed delinquencies of their subordinate officers, the men in this Congress who are unshackled should rise and say, "Who art thou, that judgest the servant of a State? To his own master—the State—he standeth or falleth."

Rome for a season ruled with an iron hand. The people became vassals of a central power, and Rome became a hateful memory.

Lord God of hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we forget.

OF
HON. OSCAR E. KELLER,
OF MINNESOTA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Tuesday, January 24, 1922,

On the amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the Federal Trade Commission from $855,000 to $955,000 in the independent offices appropriation bill in the House January 24, 1922.

Mr. KELLAR. Mr. Speaker, the House Appropriations Committee in reporting out the independent offices appropriation bill reduced the Federal Trade Commission appropriation $100,000, giving no substantial reason for such drastic action. In the report accompanying the measure the bare statement is made that the appropriation for the Federal Trade Commission is cut $100,000. It is presumed that if the question were asked, "Why was this appropriation cut?" they would answer, "For the purpose of economy." But in my opinion this is not real economy. Economy is, of course, very necessary at this time. The Government must deflate as well as business, but adequate appropriations for the Federal Trade Commission means economy for the people.

The Federal Trade Commission started to deflate back in April, 1919, when of its own volition it cut its force 50 per cent to save money, and since that time it has decreased its force upon three occasions. Here is a branch of the Government voluntarily decreasing its estimates to Congress, a very unusual occurrence in the usual course of submitting the yearly estimates. The usual custom for the various bureaus and departments in submitting their estimates is to make them as high as possible, realizing full well that the Appropriations Committee will slash them considerably in order to make a record of economy and still allow them sufficient for their actual needs. The Federal Trade Commission should be praised for their action in voluntarily reducing their estimates instead of being ridiculed.

The appropriation allowed the commission for the last fiscal year was $955,000. Gen. Dawes and the Budget Commission analyzed the program of the Federal Trade Commission very thoroughly in considering their estimates for the next fiscal year and recommended the same amount. Yet the Appropriations Committee, without any assigned reason, deliberately reduces this amount to $855,000. The reduction was made in spite of the fact that since Gen. Dawes submitted his recommendations the commission has been directed by Senate resolutions to prosecute three very important investigations: First, profits and market manipulations in export of grain; second, high prices and combinations in house-furnishing goods; third, profits of flour millers. Congress instructed the commission to make these investigations, and thereby informed the people who are interested in the resolutions that investigations would be made. The conclusion is justly arrived at by these people that Congress is sincere in its determination to investigate conditions in the various activities mentioned above. In the very next breath the appropriations to carry out these investigations are materially reduced, making it impossible for the commission to proceed as directed to by Congress. What must be the ultimate conclusion of the people? It can only be that Congress is not sincere in its purpose to fulfill its avowed purpose to investigate the illegal practices of certain combines. The people must not be misled in this matter.

A few days ago the commission sent a report to the Senate showing a conspiracy on the part of the Tobacco Trust to keep up prices. If the proposed amendment to increase this appropriation $100,000 fails, the commission will not have sufficient funds to proceed against the violators of the law disclosed in this report. There are other investigations now under way in which the people are vitally interested. The question of the production price of coal, which affects every home in the United States, is one. Every encouragement must be given the commission to vigorously and effectively prosecute these investigations.

The legislatures of Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Missouri have passed resolutions urging the commission to carry to a conclusion the "Pittsburgh base" steel case, involving the issuance of an order to the Steel Trust and other steel companies to discontinue the practice they have pursued in fixing the price of steel in all sections of the country. This is the practice which automatically fixes the price of steel in the Middle West and Northwest and makes "Gary dinners" no longer necessary. By this practice the price of steel manufactured in the Western States is determined by the price set by the Steel Corporation at Pittsburgh, plus the freight from Pittsburgh, though the steel is manufactured right at home and never pays this freight rate at all. For example, all the steel manufactured at Gary, Ind., and in Chicago territory carries $7.60 a ton additional price for the imaginary freight from Pittsburgh, which is never paid. This affects millions of people, and certainly Congress does not want to stop here by discontinuing the investigation.

It is difficult for the people of the United States to understand what we mean by economy in the reduction of appropriations when, three years after the armistice was signed, we are still appropriating in the neighborhood of $800,000,000 for the Army and Navy, for protection to the people of the United States against foreign enemies, when there is not the slightest possibility of war for some time to come. And yet the committee reduces the commission's appropriation $100,000 for the sake of economy. In my opinion, the Federal Trade Commission is of real protection to the people of the United States, and the only body in the Government machinery that protects them from the profiteers; and everybody will agree that the profiteers and unfair manufacturers and unfair merchants have been operating freely altogether too long. The point I want to stress is that we are appropriating millions upon millions for protection at the present time, where it is not needed, and then quibble over this small amount for the Federal Trade Commission, which gives the people protection against an enemy within our very midst.

In this present bill we are carrying an amount of $55,000,000 or so for the settlement of claims arising from the operations of the Shipping Board, which the committee itself admits it knows nothing about. They blindly voted in the committee for this amount which affects a very few citizens of the country. Now, I am not opposed to the payment of just claims against the Government, but still the committee appropriates money to pay these claims after admitting they know nothing about them. The committee has no right to come before this body and arbitrarily reduce the appropriation recommended by Gen. Dawes for the Federal Trade Commission, which appropriation affects 110,000,000 people in this land of ours.

Undoubtedly the packer will welcome the decrease recommended by the committee because the commission only last month opposed the modification or weakening of the packer consent decree in the hearings before Attorney General Daugherty's interdepartmental committee. It opposed modification of the decree unless to strengthen it, and particularly opposed the proposal to let the packers back into the wholesale grocery business. The commission declared the packers already had a monopoly in meat, and was the dominant factor in poultry, butter, cheese, and eggs; and that to modify the decree would make the five big packers a practically complete food trust. If this appropriation is decreased it will curb the commission in its fight against this strong, well-organized combination. If this appropriation is reduced it will mean joy to the Steel Trust; it will mean hope to the Tobacco Trust; revenge to the Beef Trust, and immunity to the flour and grain combinations. The only opposition to the Federal Trade Commission comes from business men who are unfair and want to profiteer at the expense of the people of the United States. This appropriation is a protection to the consumer, to the farmer, to the merchant, and the independent manufacturer, all of whom are certainly entitled to protection from unfair methods of competition. There is no question but that the people of the United States believe the Federal Trade Commission is the only Government agency that stands between them and the profiteer. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will be adopted; I hope Congress will allow the full amount recommended by Gen. Dawes for the maintenance of the Federal Trade Commission for the next fiscal year—$955,000—if only to show the people we are sincere when we pass resolutions calling for investigations to be made by this commission. I believe a vote for this amendment is a vote in favor of real economy.

HON. W. W. LARSEN,
OF GEORGIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Saturday, January 21, 1922.

Mr. LARSEN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an article written by the Rev. C. M. Ledbetter, of Hawkinsville, Ga., on the subject of lynching, its cause and cure.

In doing so permit me to say that I have enjoyed an intimate, personal acquaintance with Mr. Ledbetter for some years. He is not only a fine Christian character, but is a man of splendid ability, with practical knowledge of business affairs and the courage of his conviction.

I commend his article to the thoughful consideration of my colleagues and to all who may be interested in the question. The article follows:

LYNCHING—ITS CAUSES AND CURE.

The lynching subject has been discussed by all classes of people in all sections of the country and in all sorts of ways. Indeed, it may be said of it as it was said of the woman in the Bible who come to be cured of a bloody issue, "It has suffered many things of many physicians and is nothing bettered." It might be thought by some that the last word has been said on this subject. But I, for one, do not think so. It is verily true that most of what has been said in the papers and on the stump has done as much harm as good, if not more. To say the least that can be said there has been no perceptible improvement and the disease is progressing. That lynching ought to be stopped every right-thinking man must agree. For one to take any other side is to stamp him as a wrong-thinking man. I believe that everything that ought to be can be. If this thing can be stopped there is a way to go about it and it is the task of the present generation to find out the why of the breakdown in this part of our civilization.

At the outset of this discussion let us see if we can ascertain what are some of the radical defects in the past discussion. In the first place, I would point out the fact that it has been discussed almost entirely as either a sectional, a racial, or a political issue. Primarily, it is neither, and we can never get anywhere discussing it as either of the three. Economic questions can be settled as political issues but moral questions can not be so settled without great cost. We tried to settle the slavery question as a political issue and it proved a very costly project in blood and money. We tried to settle the prohibition issue in a political way and many good prohibitionists joined the Prohibition Party, but the friends of prohibition soon realized that would not do. When the Anti-Saloon League was organized as a non-partisan, nondenominational organization and it flat-footedly refused to be drawn into any political party it showed great wisdom, whether you believe in prohibition or do not.

Now, many of the northern papers have persisted in making the lynching question purely a political, sectional, or racial issue, and every word they have written on this line has only complicated matters. Most of the Negro papers and preachers have discussed it as a race question entirely, and they have made it worse every time they have touched it. Most of the white people of the South have discussed it as a race question, and they have muffed it up every time they have touched it in this way. I admit that political, racial, and sectional issues are involved; but we can never get anywhere looking at it and discussing it as such. The main features are moral and religious, and much more national than sectional, political, or racial. The North, in discussing the subject, has abused the whites of the South far more for lynching criminals than they have censured the Negroes for the crimes that furnished excuse for lynching. Do not let anyone think for a moment that I would entertain an opinion that any crime furnishes any sort of justification for lynching. There has never been a crime since Cain killed Abel that would justify it. I have used the expression "furnished the excuse for lynching" simply because people use the crime of rape as an excuse. The Negro papers and preachers have censured the white man a great deal more for lynching the Negro rapist than they have censured the rapist. Then, the white man has retaliated by abusing the Negro rapist so severely he has seemed to excuse lynching. Let the northern papers and the Negro editors and preachers spend more time discussing and censuring the criminals that furnish excuse for lynching, and the southern man spend more time trying to get the white man to see the great sin of lynching, and we will make more progress. I might also add here that neither side abusing the other is calculated to get us anywhere. There is quite a difference between abuse and criticism. A real criticism is nonpersonal and impassionate, while abuse is noncritical and so full of passion as to blur the vision. I have seen very little criticism on this subject, but a superabundance of abuse. When any of us abuses the other party we simply make the other party mad and he begins to abuse back, and very soon each side is abusing the other and excusing all the faults on his own side.

I say that the question of lynching is not a sectional question, but a national one. And yet I am bound to admit as a southern man that there is more lynching in the South than in the North, but it is but just to state that the provocations in the South are much greater than in the North. With the same provocations in the North as in the South and there would be just as much lynching there, and there is too much up there now, but that does not excuse us in the South. I am aware there is more illiteracy in the South than in the North, but that is not involved as much as the average man would think. The illiterate man is not the only man who engages in lynching. That most all the illiterates indorse lynching for certain causes I will admit. But there is a large class of literates who will defend lynching and engage in it. This class is mostly of the "peanut" politician variety, who exploit the passions of the people and fans them into flame for political purpose, and to the shame of our country be it said some of these men are in high places. The illiterates and the semiliterates are easily used by this class of politician.

To advance a step, I wish to state another fact—which is a true fact, though a large majority of our southern people hate to admit it and I hate to admit it—but I must keep before me the fact so well stated by old Isaiah, "He that covereth his sin shall not prosper." Now, this regrettable fact is simply this: More than half of our people excuse or indorse lynching. Most of them will not admit it when stated baldly as I have stated it, but it is the everlasting truth. As long as this is a fact we can never punish the lynchers. I am fully aware that most all of our newspapers, nearly all of our lawyers and preachers, denounce lynching for any and every offense, but I know that a majority of our men will either indorse or excuse lynching under certain circumstances, and when one indorses or excuses it for one offense he has let down the bars and indorsed or excused the thing. And we must say that no fence is higher than the lowest place and no chain is stronger than the weakest link. If this thing were not true as I have stated, we could punish some lynchers. Many men do not hesitate to swear to a lie to defend the lynchers, while many more are afraid to tell the truth for fear of retaliatory measures by the lynchers and sympathizers. I have known men to go on the stand and swear they did not recognise any of the lynchers when positively I know they did recognise them.

But is there a way out of this terrible condition? Yes; but we must change public opinion, and we will never change public opinion till we thoroughly recognise the fact it needs changing. Look the facts squarely in the face and don't abuse the man who states them. The way most of us are doing is simply to abuse the fellow who states the facts when they are unpleasant.

But to the task of changing public opinion. We all must recognize that this must be done if we stop the evils complained of. Can it be done? I think it can. It is going to take time, thought, prayer, patience, and money. Mr. John D. Rockefeller gave, I believe, $1,000,000 to help stamp out hookworm in the South, and I am sure the money was well spent. I went over one whole county and helped the hookworm doctor, and even went so far as to make speeches on it. I remember in one little section where one whole family of eight or nine members was on the charities of the people, and not a single one of the family could work enough to support himself, and in three or four weeks everyone was self-sustaining and could work all the time. No one knows the good that came of this money except those who interested themselves in the work. Now, if some rich man would invest some money in this work and go about it in a determined and a systematic way public opinion can be so changed that in 10 or 15 years there will hardly be a case of lynching in all the country. Has anyone thought a plan? I have been thinking for some months on it and somehow I believe I have thought out a plan that will work.

How would I go about it? I would go about it like it was done in eradicating the tick, only I would take the State as a unit rather than the county. I would start on my own State, Georgia, as Georgia has been heading the list in lynchings for some years. I would get some good, capable man with no ax to grind and I would be sure to put at the head of this bureau a southern man. I would put in his hands a sufficient sum of money to carry on the work. I would instruct him to go to every white college and university in the State and offer about three prizes for the first, second, and best essay or speech on the prevention and cure for lynching. These speeches or essays should be delivered before public audiences, copies furnished the local papers, and also furnished this bureau. I would pick out about 200 of the leading high schools of the State and have prizes offered in those schools for the same kind of work. Then I would pick out some of the best of these speeches or essays, have them printed in book form, furnish them to every newspaper in the State, every preacher in the State, every library in the State. In this way we would soon create a fruitless literature upon this subject. These essays and speeches would engage the brains of from three to five thousand of the best young minds of our State, whose minds are yet open for the formation of correct opinion. In the minds of these there would be developed such a conscience as would touch the whole State. In all this reading and writing the question would be studied in an abstract way and not with reference to any particular case. Is that the end? No. Each of these writers would have from 20 to 50 relatives and friends, who would become interested and naturally take sides with those who write—anywhere from 100,000 to 250,000 people would naturally take the right side of the question. Then think of the many thousands who would read parts of this discussion, at least, in the newspapers, and you begin to get some conception of the real outcome of this project.

Is there anything else? Yes. I would go to every Negro school of any importance and offer prizes for the best essays and speeches on the questions, What can the Negro do to stop the crimes that cause lynching, and what can the Negro do to bring about perfect cooperation between the whites and blacks in working out our problem?

Then it can be easily understood how in all the discussions the very best ideas would come to the surface. There would come out of this the fact that the Negro who tries to take revenge on white people for something that the Negro has suffered from the white man hurts his own race more than he hurts the white man. Then the white man would come to realize that whenever he oppresses the Negro he hurts his own race far more than he hurts the Negro race. That old heathen slave, Epictetus, said a great thing once when he said, "I am never a great sufferer except by my own faults." So it is true that no race is ever a great sufferer, except from itself. The reaction on the Negro race of the Negro's crime against the whites is tremendous, and the reaction of the white man's mistreatment of the Negro is of far greater moment and injury to the white man than it is to the Negro. These fundamental principles must be burned into the conscience of the people until they are not only seen but realized.

An error can be put into the literature of the Nation and read and reread by the people until it gets into the very lifeblood and becomes a very part of them. Whole nations have become corrupted in this way. The philosophy of the Germans, as false as it was, was taught in the schools and read in their papers and even preached in their pulpits, until the whole nation was permeated with the poison. The defeat on the battle field did not get it out; it will take almost a generation to do it. If error can get in people in this way, how much more can the real truth? The plan here indicated can be followed, expanded, enlarged until it percolates into every hamlet and village and mine, and the errors of the whites and blacks on this subject of lawlessness can be eradicated.

The plan here indicated is practical and can be worked out so that in 10 or 15 years lynchings and the crimes that cause lynchings can be practically stopped. If some big, rich man in the North or South or a combination of them will start a bureau on this line it would do great good. The man who is at the head of this bureau should be required to keep busy gathering data and following up this work all the time. He should visit schools indicated, talk with professors and students, and address gatherings and courts, and in a general way get in touch with the newspapers and have facts and information furnished to all the papers of the country. I believe almost every first-class newspaper in the land would cooperate with this kind of a plan, and we would lift public opinion so high it would not tolerate lynching or the crimes that excuse it.

OF
HON. MARTIN C. ANSORGE.
OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, January 25, 1922.

Mr. ANSORGE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I thank the chairman of the Judiciary Committee and the House for its unanimous consent that I may have this further opportunity to speak on this important measure.

In the first place, I want to answer the question just propounded by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The gentleman from Texas asked the gentleman from Wyoming whether he would have voted for the enforcement act before the passage of the eighteenth amendment?

I remind the gentleman from Texas that the enforcement bill now before the House is being passed just 54 years after the passage of the fourteenth amendment. The plain implication of the question asked by the gentleman from Texas was that the proposed bill requires a new constitutional amendment. But clearly that begs the very question which has been debated on the floor of this House for the past five weeks. The answer is that section 5 of the fourteenth amendment, passed in 1868, gives Congress the power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of the amendment, so that the enforcement act, which is now before the House, is being passed 54 years after the adoption of the amendment

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] also referred to the conviction yesterday of some white and colored men in Oklahoma for the lynching of a Negro, and the House was reminded from the floor of several isolated instances of convictions of white men for the lynching of Negroes. On the first day of the debate on this bill I pointed out that 8,432 persons had been lynched in the past 33 years, of whom 2,718 were Negroes. These statistics have been before the House during all these weeks of debate, and I have sat through all of it, and I have heard no statistics of convictions for the lynching of Negroes other than the few isolated cases which have been mentioned from time to time. It is therefore clear that the charge that lynchers of Negroes, in the overwhelming majority of cases, go unpunished stands uncontroverted before this House in committee.

It is my contention that the failure to prosecute lynchers has constituted a failure on the part of the States to grant the protection guaranteed by the Constitution and that prosecutions and convictions would have acted as a deterrent of future lynchings. The opponents of this bill may claim that sheriffs have been overpowered when in the honest enforcement of their duties, but they can not claim that the States have not failed to prosecute and convict the lynchers.

I also want to refer briefly to the statement made to-day by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] to the effect that Negroes in the South own farm lands valued at over $2,000,000,000, whereas in the North the value of their farm lands is but $60,000,000. This seems ridiculously small in comparison, but it must be remembered that the majority of Negroes in the North live in towns and cities and that they have, by their zeal and endeavor, accumulated a substantial amount of property not included in the category of "farm lands."

History records that the legislation and the amendments fostered by Congress to protect the Negro safeguard their newly acquired rights in an active, positive, and direct way. By the passage of the thirteenth amendment, slavery was prohibited and possible legal constitutional objections concerning abolition were settled beyond legal controversy.

Slavery as an institution had been condemned by the emancipation proclamation issued by President Lincoln to take effect in January of 1863. By this instrument the Negro was set free by the Army commanders as soon as the Union forces took possession and occupied slave territory. A doctrine that the colored man was no longer a subject of property was a mere humanitarian announcement in view of the peculiar conditions which ensued in the Southern States. In this respect we have an exact forerunner of the present inactivity of the State governments, in the regions where lynchings are tolerated, to the official attitude of the State governments in the enactment of civil and criminal statutes at the time when the "black laws" were in vogue immediately after the Civil War. Now, as then, a failure on the part of the State administrative officers and agencies called forth a display of Federal power which found its expression in post Civil War times in the war enactments and the direct congressional legislation which were closely related to them.

A failure to enforce the law equally and without partiality to color justified a departure from the constitutional plan originally contemplated by the framers.

Perhaps the main evil which Congress sought to remedy was the official attitude of the executives of the State governments, but by the abolition of slavery as an institution any individual who either enforced involuntary servitude or undertook to commence and enforce bondage was subject to the Federal penal jurisdiction.

One need only recall the various forms of protective measures enacted by Congress between the thirteenth and fourteenth amendments intended to safeguard the civil, political, and even social rights of the Negro in order to acquire a true perspective of the protection which Congress aimed to throw about the former slave by means of special legislation in his favor.

The provisions of the freedman's bureau and the first civil rights legislation indicate the extent to which our National Legislature deemed it necessary to go to offset the direct interferences by State activity with the rights of the new class of citizens, and the neglect and inactivity on the part of the State executive machinery in enforcing the law and treating all persons within their jurisdictions fairly and without discrimination.

The fourteenth amendment, which was ratified in July, 1868, was passed to overcome whatever constitutional objections could be urged against the exercise of this Federal power. By the fifth section of this amendment Congress was given power to enforce the amendment by appropriate legislation. Undoubtedly the Supreme Court of the United States interpreted the legal effect of these two amendments and of the fifteenth amendment, which was passed in 1870, in a way which restricted in some measure the direct exercise of Federal power in behalf of the colored man. By a bare majority of one in the Slaughterhouse cases (16 Wall., 165), and later in United States v. Cruikshank (92 U. S., 588) and United States v. Harris (106 U. S., 200), our supreme judicial authority declared that the prohibitions of the fourteenth and the fifteenth amendments applied to the official acts of the State governments and the officers acting by virtue of an authority which the State conferred upon them. The right to franchise, which is distinct from citizenship—Minor v. Happersett (21 Wall., 162)—was not granted as a Federal right arising from the fifteenth amendment but was merely a restraint upon official State activity in denying the right of suffrage because of race, color, or previous conditions of servitude.

Under the thirteenth amendment, however, the powers of Congress to enact primary and positive laws was established by the determination of the Supreme Court of the United States. Congress could under this amendment prohibit by law, and therefore punish for its violation, any man whether acting as an officer of a State government or its subdivisions or merely as a private individual for participating in any activities which tended to renew slavery or anything that approximated it. The annulment of this condition of servitude was added to the powers of Congress, and legislation directed to remove these evils was adjudicated to be as valid as if it had been passed pursuant to a power originally granted to the Federal Government upon the framing of the Constitution. Thus in Clyatt v. United States (197 U. S., 726) the Federal Government rightly exercised its dominion over private individuals who were parties in a plot to enforce involuntary work. The limits of this doctrine, however, were determined by the decision in United States v. Hodges (203 U. S., 1), which was followed by United States v. Powell (212 U. S., 564). The court there drew the distinction that while Congress could pass direct legislation to prohibit slavery and enforced labor similar to it, an interference to the right to contract or hold property was not such an indicia of slavery as to be within the Federal power.

The cases here collected are the leading utterances of the Supreme Court as regards direct interferences by the National Government by legislation in behalf of an oppressed class.

It is not controverted that official abuse by any State officer can be made penal under the Federal criminal law. This is the exact holding in Ex parte Virginia (100 U. S., 667, 676), and has been repeated on numerous occasions by the Supreme Court. It is likewise settled that a partiality in administration or refusal to apply the law justly has fallen under judicial condemnation. Maladministration, abuse of power, or inactivity are merely incidents of the misuse of powers granted by the State. (Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S., 356.) A law which is fair on its face can be administered with injustice and fall within the corrective powers of the National Government. Cases which are apparently in opposition to this conclusion are those where there was a mere private interference in isolated cases with the enjoyment of a social, political, or civil right.

It is clear that scattered, isolated, and unconnected individual offenses are not within the contemplation of the powers granted by the amendments. But the legislation here proposed is founded upon a legislative finding by Congress, that as regards the evil of lynching, the State authority has pro tanto ceased to exist and has been usurped by the mob. The only appropriate congressional measures, therefore, are laws which fill the void of authority thus resulting because of official inactivity in enforcing the State law. The exercise of Federal power, to be appropriate, useful, and efficient, must be as broad as the evil which it seeks to destroy.

Congress has found that the unwillingness or neglect to enforce criminal law against offenders in lynching cases is sufficiently appreciable to be taken cognizance of by the national authority. The first section of the fourteenth amendment states:

No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

While the first portion of this section deals with making and enforcing laws, the other portions say that no State shall "deprive" any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor "deny" to any person the equal protection of the laws. A person can be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law either by legislation passed by the State or by unequal administration of a statute which superficially indicates no discrimination. It can be effectively done by a suspension of the laws as regards a certain group or by an arbitrary and incomplete law enforcement policy. In this way persons can be denied the equal protection of laws or be deprived of their liberty by a failure of officials to observe their status as citizens as well as by tyrannical practices originating in arbitrary laws aimed against them.

The failure to prosecute those who violate the State law by means of lynching by official passivity or inactivity removes the protection which the State usually affords an individual by making an interference with his liberty criminal and to the extent of removing the deterrent of committing crime thus denies or deprives the citizen of the protection which he is entitled to have from his own State. The due process of law which the Constitution guarantees to citizens of the United States, as well as to citizens of the State, means proper protection from crime and punishment for those who offend the criminal law of the State by interfering with the liberty of the injured citizen.

Official neglect which instead of punishing and preventing further violations of the State's peace encourages the offenders to do a similar act at another time, allows two standards of conduct to exist in the State to the detriment of the liberty of the class against which the discrimination is made.

Were there no State governments enforcing the law it would not be argued that Congress did not have the power to step in and secure to all citizens the benefits of the fourteenth amendment. That is the basis for the removal of causes to the Federal courts where proper protection is not afforded by the State government. It is significant to note that where the State, whether by legislation or by judicial or administrative inertia, does not recognize the rights of liberty of all equally and fails in the performance of its duty toward all of its citizens, the implications are as stated in the case which is most earnestly relied upon by the opponents of this bill that the Federal power is deemed warranted—United States v. Harris (106 U. S., 639):

When, on the contrary, the laws of the State, as enacted by its legislative and construed by its judicial and administered by its executive departments, recognize and protect the rights of all persons, the amendment imposes no duty and confers no power upon Congress.

Section 5519 of the Revised Statutes is not limited to take effect only in case the State shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, or deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person the equal protection of the laws. It applies, no matter how well the State may have performed its duty. Under it private persons are liable to punishment for conspiring to deprive anyone of the equal protection of the laws enacted by the State.

Gentlemen, in view of the facts, and in view of the decisions, how can it be said by members of the opposition that to vote for this bill would violate their oaths of office? The Constitution provides that no State shall deprive any person of life without due process of law. The Constitution says that no State shall deny to any person the equal protection of the laws. The Constitution gives Congress the power to enforce by legislation these provisions. How can Congress enforce these provisions without legislation? If this is not the legislation which the empowering clause contemplates, what form of legislation can Congress pass which would ease the consciences of those who fear that by carrying out the provisions of the Constitution they are doing something unconstitutional?

OF
HON. JAMES H. SINCLAIR,
OF NORTH DAKOTA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, January 26, 1922.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker, there is being now held in this city a great conference on the subject of agriculture. At the request of the Secretary of Agriculture, there are gathered delegates from every section of the Union, brought here to study the serious problems of farming and to endeavor to formulate a remedy for the deplorable plight in which the farmers of our Nation find themselves. Appeals for aid come from every agricultural section. The wheat grower, the cotton planter, the corn and live-stock raiser, even the dairy and fruit man, all find themselves in dire financial distress, with bankruptcy almost inevitable.

This condition has been brought about by the unprecedented drop in the prices of farm products in the past year. At the same time all the farmer's investment and working capital which forms the basis for his production has been made upon an inflated valuation. Thus the cost of producing last year's crop was many millions of dollars in excess of its market value.

Agriculture is the basic industry of all civilized peoples. Its prosperity is reflected in every other industry; likewise its poverty. When agriculture fails no other industry can succeed. It is pretty generally conceded that agriculture is now on the brink of national ruin. If we are to return to normalcy we must place the business of farming on a sound and prosperous footing. It will require advanced legislation to do this. We ought to do something for which perhaps there is no precedent, but the conditions are so serious as to require prompt and far-reaching action. This Congress has the gravest problem to solve that has ever confronted a legislative body, for not only must we deal with the situation in America on its own account, but in its relation to the rest of the world. The civilization of Europe is even now hanging in the balance. It is our duty to take the legislative steps necessary to remedy our condition before we become as sadly involved in business disruption.

The question naturally arises, "What steps shall we take in this emergency?" The first suggestion is for direct aid to the farmer. Some legislation along this line has been enacted. The revival of the War Finance Corporation has been considered an agricultural measure. It no doubt has done some good indirectly, but, in my opinion, it has been more of an aid to bankers than to farmers. I have yet to hear of a single farmer who has been given an additional dollar of new credit through this agency, whereas I have received any number of complaints from farmers who have tried to get help and have not succeeded. Upon bringing these complaints to the attention of the officials of the War Finance Corporation I was informed that it is not the intention of the law to give aid directly to the farmer. However, the distribution of this grent amount of money, over $10,000,000 having been loaned in North Dakota already, can not help but be reflected in better conditions for the farmers and business interests of the State. As truly indicating the serious situation of the farmers of my State, I am in receipt of a telegram from the executive committee of the Nonpartisan League, which reads as follows:

Hon. J. H. SINCLAIR,
Representative in Congress, Washington, D. C.:

Situation in this State among farmers even more desperate than outlined by President in his address to agricultural conference. Farmers have lost power to help themselves and business stagnation prevents help from local sources. Unless something is done quickly conditions will be deplorable in spring. Hope well-nigh abandoned now in drought-stricken parts of State. There is but one chance for recovery. The State executive committee of the Nonpartisan League, representing 55,000 farmers, demands that the Federal Government fix the minimum price for No. 1 dark northern spring wheat at $2.20; that the Government revive the Grain Corporation, with power to buy the 1922 crop; that Department of Agriculture, through agricultural colleges and other agencies, begin immediate campaign on an extended scale to show the farmer the necessity of reducing wheat acreage, and thus limiting production, to prevent price-depressing surplus. This campaign should take on the dimensions of Liberty loan drives and should reach the farmer through poster, newspaper, and billboard. This program, to be effective, must be given immediate force. It can not long wait if this generation of farmers is to survive the fearful losses that have bled our producers white, and unless material aid is given at once agriculture will crumble and all the superstructure of business that is built upon it will fall in ruins. If you delay you destroy us.

A. A. LIEDERBACH,
Chairman State Executive Committee, Nonpartisan League.

What the farmers of the United States need is not so much temporary and direct aid, although in some sections this must be extended to keep them in business; but far more important will be the establishment of a marketing system that will insure a profitable price for what they raise in the future. It is of little use to extend further credits without providing the means whereby the loans may be repaid. Many farmers are now too poor to command sound credit. If given more credit they would be only that much deeper in debt. What we need and must have is a stable market that will afford at all times an opportunity to sell our products at prices that will return a decent living and a profit in addition to the producer. This will enable the farmer to go to work with some hope of eventually paying off his debts. Congress is the only agency that can, in my opinion, give this remedy. The machinery has been tried before and found adequate, not only in the United States but in Canada and Australia as well. The United States Grain Corporation demonstrated that it could and did control prices during the war, and I believe it can again do so in peace times. I have, therefore, introduced a bill, H. R. 9461, which has for its purpose the fixing and stabilization of prices of the principal farm products through a revival of the grain corporation. The principle of this bill is indorsed by farmers and farm organizations generally, even where there is a difference of opinion as to the means for its accomplishment.

The Equity Cooperative Exchange, at its recent annual meeting, adopted the following resolution:

GUARANTEED MINIMUM PRICE FOR GRAIN.

In order to meet the emergency which now confronts the farming population of this country, and in order to save agriculture from complete wreckage and destruction, we advocate the revival (in modified form) of the grain corporation and the establishment of a minimum price for the surplus grain products of the country. Such guaranteed minimum price to cover the cost of production and a reasonable profit thereon, and to continue until such time as agriculture shall recover from its present critical condition.

This is in line with my plan, which in addition to putting the wheat grower on his feet will bring relief to the cotton planter, corn and live-stock producer. It is the only means that I know of that will do it in time to save the farmers of the country from further financial loss and eventual ruin.

OF
HON. HAMILTON FISH, JR.,
OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, January 26, 1922.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD, I submit a speech made by myself on the 18th of January, as follows:

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I believe that Abraham Lincoln would turn in his grave if he thought that 60 years after the emancipation proclamation a Republican House would hesitate to pass legislation to protect colored people from being deprived of their lives without due process of law, and I fail to follow the logic or the political tactics of my Republican colleagues who try to pretend that this legislation is not aimed at special sections of the South. The spirit of Abraham Lincoln still lives and the Federal Government is obliged to take cognizance of the hideous plague of lynching and provide a penalty so drastic as to render it dangerous for future mobs to indulge in.

Mr. UPSHAW. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FISH. Yes.
Mr. UPSHAW. There is no reference whatever to colored people in this bill.
Mr. FISH. That is the exact point, and I will say to the gentleman from Georgia that the reason for this bill, and in my mind the sole justification for the bill, is that his State and a few others States like his own fail to prosecute the lynchers.
Mr. UPSHAW again rose.
Mr. FISH. Does the gentleman want to ask me a question?
Mr. UPSHAW. Yes.
Mr. FISH. Proceed.
Mr. UPSHAW. I just want to ask the gentleman if he realizes that there has never been a lynching in Georgia in which there has not been an effort on the part of the State to punish the lynchers? And I wish to say further that the editorial just read from the New York Tribune does not bring out the fact that Georgia has had a thousand times greater provocation for lynching than New York has had.
Mr. FISH. I will ask how many men have been convicted for lynching in the State of Georgia?
Mr. UPSHAW. I do not know exactly how many men have been convicted.
Mr. FISH. Has a single one been convicted?
Mr. UPSHAW. Yes; a number of them.
Mr. FISH. And sent to jail?
Mr. UPSHAW. Many of them have.
Mr. FISH. I think the gentleman is mistaken.
Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; and sent to the penitentiary, too, in Alabama.
Mr. FISH. The State of Georgia has an average of 10 lynchings a year, whereas the State of Virginia has no more lynchings than the Northern States, and in each case in the State of Virginia the lynchers have been prosecuted and convicted. It is only for your State of Georgia and others like her that we are obliged to enact Federal legislation to enforce the fourteenth amendment. [Applause.]

I will say, furthermore, to the gentleman from Georgia that it would be far more profitable for a certain Member of the Congress of the United States who declared that American soldiers have been lynched in France and have been hanged without being convicted by court-martial in the American Expeditionary Forces—it would be far more profitable, I say, if that man who made those infamous charges would investigate lynchings in his own State instead of besmirching the record of the American Expeditionary Forces. [Applause.]

Mr. UPSHAW. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FISH. I regret that I can not yield any further.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield further.
Mr. FISH. I can not remain silent on this question. I would be untrue to those colored men of this country who paid the supreme sacrifice, and especially to men of my own command who gave up their lives to make the world safe for democracy, if I failed to advocate the passage of the antilynching bill. Let me tell you something that perhaps you Members of the House do not fully appreciate, and that is that the colored man who went into the war had in his heart the feeling that he was fighting not only to make the world safe for democracy but also to make this country safe for his own race. [Applause.] I wish also to testify to the loyalty, fortitude, and bravery of the colored soldiers, which compares favorably with any soldiers in the allied armies or our own. Gentlemen, consider the appalling fact that there have been men who wore the uniform lynched by citizens of Georgia. Some of them were innocent, indeed, because only 20 per cent of those who have been lynched were lynched for the crime of rape. I can say further to the gentleman from Georgia, how can he defend the fact that even women have been lynched in the State of Georgia?

Mr. UPSHAW. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FISH. No; the gentleman can answer in his own time. I am not a lawyer and do not intend to go into the legal points of the bill, but I have had political experience enough to know that it will be contested and disputed on constitutional grounds to the very end. It will be up to the Supreme Court finally to pass on the constitutionality of the antilynching bill and not the eminent constitutional lawyers of the House.

I have sworn to support the Constitution of the United States, and on that account, if for no other reason, it would be my sacred duty as a Member of the House of Representatives to vote for a drastic antilynching bill to protect the rights and lives of American citizens everywhere in the United States and put an end to lawlessness, which threatens the administration of justice. Who can tell, if lynching is not suppressed, when it will spread to take in the unpopular employer or capitalist and even public officials while enforcing the law?

My distinguished colleague, Mr. ANSORGE, of New York, representing a constituency of nearly half a million people, of whom 100,000 are colored men and women, has clearly pointed out the fact that members of a lynching mob in the South are seldom apprehended, rarely prosecuted by the local or State authorities, and almost never convicted.

Of all the dastardly and cowardly crimes lynching is the worst because the lynchers are armed to the teeth and the victim is generally an unarmed person in the custody of the sheriff or local official. The mob is composed of cowardly ruffians, and unless drastic legislation is passed and enforced the spirit of lawlessness will run riot throughout the country. As for me, I do not think the bill is drastic enough; it should provide for machine guns in all county jails where lynching is rampant for use against mobs who attempt to substitute their desires for the orderly process of the law and thereby subvert our republican form of government.

The advocates of this bill do not believe that its passage will solve the racial question, but they believe that it is a step in the right direction. Personally I advocate the creation of a commission to examine into the economic and political status of the colored people and report back to the House a comprehensive plan for the betterment of their condition and assure them equal protection and equal opportunity under the law.

Mr. BRAND. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FISH. I will.
Mr. BRAND. Has the gentleman any information in regard to the first lynching that occurred in Georgia?
Mr. FISH. There have been lynchings there for 50 years.
Mr. BRAND. Has the gentleman any information as to when the first lynching occurred in Georgia?
Mr. FISH. I do not know when the first occurred.
Mr. BRAND. The first lynching which ever occurred in Georgia, so far as I can gather, was in 1865. A Negro man raped a white woman in Gwinnett County. He fled for protection to Lawrenceville, where a company of Federal soldiers was stationed. When learning the facts, they took him in custody and hanged him in the courthouse square. The lynchers were partly from your own State and other States north of the Mason and Dixon line.

Mr. FISH. It is the exception that proves the rule. There have been lynchings in Georgia for 50 years, and it exists to-day, so that colored citizens are forced to come to Congress and ask for protection of their lives. And if you Republicans fail to pass the bill, you will spread discouragement among the colored people throughout the land, who have been given to understand that the Republican Party was going to do everything in its power to provide that the colored citizen should have equal rights under the law and that his life will be protected everywhere in the United States. The colored citizen will not only be disappointed and discouraged but he will believe that Congress has turned a deaf ear to his plea for simple justice. If some of you wavering Republicans fail to support the bill for disputed constitutional reasons. The rejection of the bill will close the door of hope and do much to aggravate the racial problem.

This is meritorious legislation, legislation which we have promised to the colored people in our party platform. We owe it to ourselves and to those colored people who fought in our Army and to their kin; we owe it to our party, to tell the people in the South that the antilynching bill is aimed against special counties and States in the South, and if they can not and will not enforce the laws, if they will not prosecute the lynchers, then the Federal Government will do it for them.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman think he is interpreting the act of the Republican Party in that?

Mr. FISH. The Republican Party has written it into its platform, and it has no apology to make for the antilynching bill.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman does not approve of the mob in East St. Louis. Would not the gentleman favor an amendment to this bill so that it would include the riot like that in East St. Louis, where 25 or 30 people were killed?

Mr. FISH. I would favor some amendments to this bill. I understand that quite a few believe that the bill should be amended. In my opinion, however, many Members of the House are wasting their time discussing the bill from a constitutional point of view before the provisions of the bill are perfected by amendments.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does not the gentleman understand that this bill would not punish the mob in East St. Louis that killed a number of colored people?

Mr. FISH. In that case men were prosecuted and convicted. I think six white men are now in jail for having taken part in that riot. I ask the gentleman is there a single white man in the State of Texas now in jail who took part in any lynching? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LONDON. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is not a politician. He is young in politics, and he has told more of the truth about the bill than the other people on the Republican side.

The Antilynching Bill.

We must keep the faith! Yea, we must remain true to the principles of Abraham Lincoln!

OF

HON. WILLIAM F. KOPP.

OF IOWA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, January 26, 1922.

THE ANTILYNCHING BILL.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the discussion of this measure has deeply interested me. The evil to be corrected is serious. The remedy proposed is important.

In no sense can this be considered a sectional measure. It applies alike to all parts of our country. It may be invoked more in the South than in the North, but, if so, only because the evil is more prevalent in the South than in the North. There is, however, no purpose or desire to disturb the relations between the two sections. As a son of one who wore the blue, I rejoice that our fathers were a generous foe. Lincoln spoke "with malice toward none; with charity for all." At Appomattox Grant returned the sword of Lee. Such has been the spirit of the North.

But when we are asked to surrender American principles we can not comply. When we are told that slavery was a good thing for the colored man, we refuse to accept the conclusion. When it is proclaimed that mobs are necessary in America, we challenge the assertion.

A nation that will not guarantee a judicial hearing to every citizen is recreant to its highest duty. Mob law must be ended. Every man in America, rich or poor, white or black, is entitled to a trial in court. As far as I can bring it about, every man in America shall have such a trial. The equal protection of the laws is the very foundation of this Republic.

The justice of legislation against lynching can not be questioned. Do you doubt the need of such legislation? Listen.

In the last 30 years more than 3,000 American citizens have been lynched. Of these, more than 50 have been women. Even children have been put to death in this awful manner. During 1920, the last year for which we have accurate figures, 65 persons were lynched. Most of these were hanged or shot, but 8 were burned. Think of it—burned! The mobs piled up combustible material, placed the victims upon it, poured out large quantities of coal oil, and then applied the torch. While the helpless victims groaned and writhed in frightful agony, the frenzied and infuriated mobs shouted for joy. Such scenes must be made impossible in America. This is not civilization. This is savagery, savagery in its most terrible and hideous form.

It is said that mobs are necessary on account of the colored race. How absurd! Are not the courts able to convict and sentence colored men when guilty? The judges are white; the prosecuting attorneys are white; the juries are white. No; the question is not whether a guilty colored man, charged with a heinous offense, can be convicted, but whether an innocent colored man, charged with such an offense, can be acquitted. That is the only question, as far as the prosecution of colored people is concerned. Race prejudice may convict an innocent colored man, but it never acquits a guilty one.

During this debate many cruel things have been said about the colored race. This I deeply regret. It ill becomes us to taunt the colored race upon its weakness. Many boastful things have been said of the white race. It ill becomes us to thank God that we are not like other men. We have a common Father. We have a common religion. We have been thrown together, and we must bear each other's burdens.

The presence of the colored race in America seems to be looked upon by some as a crime. Certain it is that if this be a crime, it can not be laid at the door of the colored man. He did not come here voluntarily. He was brought here against his will. The slave traders were white men. Talk about brutes! Talk about cruelties! Talk about atrocities! Talk about moral degradation! Of all the world's infamous characters the slave traders were the worst. It still makes us shudder to think of them. Hell itself must have blushed for shame when they entered there.

The colored race has been out of slavery only a little over half a century. Necessarily it has its limitations. The marvel is not, however, that it has progressed so little, but that it has progressed so much. No doubt it has among its numbers some who are not a credit to the race and who make more difficult the pathway of those who are. As a whole, however, the colored people are kind, affectionate, and loyal. When sickness comes into your home and contagion strikes terror even to the bravest hearts they will not desert you. The colored people are making a heroic effort to advance in civilization. They are doing many kinds of work. They are acquiring homes. They are building churches. They are producing wise leaders. Booker T. Washington will always stand out as one of the great men of this generation. Let us not close the door of opportunity to the colored race. On the contrary, let us encourage it to make further progress. The better the colored race becomes the better it will be for the white race.

The man who takes part in a mob brutalizes himself and all with whom he comes in contact. He is an enemy of both races. The white man can not make the colored man better by inflicting injustice upon him. No. No. The white man can not uplift the colored man by degrading himself. That is impossible. This is the true philosophy:

> Be noble! and the nobleness that lies
> In other men, sleeping, but never dead,
> Will rise in majesty to meet thine own.

The colored race is here, and here to stay. Extinction is unthinkable. Deportation is impossible. The two races can not be separated. For weal or for woe, their destinies are linked together. There is only one solution and that is kindly cooperation. Therein—and therein alone—lies the hope for the future.

A mob is always monstrous, but especially so when an innocent man is put to death. Not infrequently that happens. It is a difficult thing to determine the guilt or innocence of a person, even in an orderly court of justice, where sworn testimony is taken, and where there is time for counsel and deliberation. But a mob does not reason. It does not consider evidence. It is moved by passion and acts upon suspicion. When a mob puts an innocent man to death it, at the same time, brands him guilty of some infamous crime. Thus he is robbed not only of his life but also of his good name. No greater wrong than this can be done to any man. Those who survive must suffer infinite grief and sorrow.

The legal questions involved have been fully and ably discussed by others, and I shall only touch upon them. It is claimed that the bill before us is unconstitutional. Whenever there is any substantial opposition to a bill, some one is sure to make that claim. During the past 50 years hundreds of bills have been denounced as unconstitutional, but during all of that time only a few have actually been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States. It is true that in the old days of State rights this bill would probably not have been sustained, but it must be borne in mind that since those days the Constitution has been amended. It must also be borne in mind that even without amendment the Constitution grows and expands. It keeps pace with the advancing thought of the Nation. The Constitution must be interpreted in the light of the day in which we live. If the States permit American citizens to be deprived of life, without due process of law, it is the duty of the National Government to give them protection. That is one of the great purposes of the Constitution.
